Believing that a dairymen does better to first invest his money in good cows rather than in expensive buildings and equipment, Mr. Ury's own milking barn and milk room are of a type easily kept clean and sanitary but nothing elaborate, as can be seen from the picture. He is a milking machine enthusiast because he has found that by this method he can milk his cows in less than half the time required to do the job by hand. The cows prefer the machine methods of milking, he says, and it also enables him to produce a high grade of milk impossible under the old system.

Drain—then refill

with TEXACO

Most cars require a heavier grade of oil for warm weather. If you have forgotten to change to the correct Summer grade — do it today. But remember that “any oil” isn’t good enough. You have too much at stake to be satisfied with just “any oil.”

Drain — then refill with the correct grade of Texaco. With this clean, clear, golden motor oil in your crankcase you can rest assured of perfect lubrication. For Texaco is made only from the finest of selected crudes. It is refined and again refined, until it passes the exacting Texaco standards of purity. The clean, clear, golden color of Texaco is visible evidence of its purity.

Let Texaco help your car give its best performance this Summer. Look for the Texaco Red Star with the Green T. Drain—then refill with Texaco. The Texaco chart tells the dealer the exact grade of Texaco for your car.

Trade, An Enriching Element To Clanton

Trade enriched the citizens of England, so it contributed to their freedom, and this freedom, on the other side extended their commerce, whence rose the grandeur of the State. Trade, too, can enrich Chilton County, contribute to the freedom of the farmers of the county who are tilling the soil to make a meager living for their families, and this freedom, can also extend the commerce of Chilton County.

Farming and trading conditions in this county are considered good, and have all the possibilities of becoming better with the coming years, and the realization of the people here, that they must consider modern methods, and present day times. Methods used by grandfathers and great-grandfathers might have been good then, but other methods that have been experimented with and proven more profitable are now at the command of those who wish them. To meet the changing conditions and present day times, one must be ever on the alert, watching to prevent duplications of mistakes made once, and on the lookout for ways of improvement over methods now in use in their various businesses.

To sit back, quietly, expecting the buyers to come to your business house or farm without an invitation and something to attract them there, is to pilot your ship in the opposite direction of progress and success, and is to say as much as you are willing for the other fellow to get all the business and recognition. Then there is the one-time explosions, like a fire cracker, it makes a big fuss for a moment and then it is gone, never amounting to more than a noise. No good can ever come of these efforts made only once. It takes the continuous effort to bring results. A continuous drip, drip, of small drops of water will wear away the largest stone; continuous gnawing will masticate the largest bone. Continuous advertising will cause results satisfying to the merchant who wishes to increase his trade. The day of the country merchant is almost gone, in fact, it is gone in the cities, and small towns, in which group Clanton may be classed, and it is the merchant who is ready to meet the present day times with his merchandise he offers to the buying public, and the prices he places on such merchandise, who stands out progressively. His place of business must be attractive to the buyer, inviting in its appearance, stimulating in its effectiveness on bargain seekers, quality seekers, as well as quantity seekers.

Under existing conditions the buying public is always looking for the best value for their money, taking under consideration but little, the place where they make their purchases, and it is the merchant who sends his message to the people, telling what he has for sale, and the prices he is asking, and these prices will have to be attractive to bring to that merchant the trade he is desirous of getting. Advertising and publicity go hand in hand. Give a person or an article of merchandise the proper kind of publicity, and it will, in a very short time, become nationally, and probably internationally known. Mail order houses have no agents going over the country soliciting business, instead, they advertise, mailing large catalogs with their merchandise listed with description and price, to the people all over the states. There is no wonder that people buy from these houses, send their money away from home. They can sit in their home, look at the catalog, read the description of an article, see the price before they buy. You must put your message over to the people to make them sit up and notice you. You must have something to offer them, to attract them to your place of business, and once you impress on the public that you are in business, invite and want their trade, and that you have something worthy of their consideration in buying, then you are keeping abreast of the times.

A Real Road Problem

The good roads movement in the United States has been productive of so much enthusiasm that we are likely to reach the conclusion that our present highway mileage is adequate for all purposes and that there is no necessity for going to the expense of further building on a large scale.

The facts show differently. The United States has three times as many automobiles as the rest of the world, but Europe has four times our surfaced roadway.

We stand twelfth in the world in the proportion of highway mileage to square miles of territory.

A vast field for highway development remains almost untouched in this country. Great stress has been laid on construction of trunk highways. Farm-to-market roads now need attention.

At present there is a determined movement, led by the American Farm Bureau Federation, to provide the farmer with the all-weather, year-round highways that he needs and deserves. This can be done, in most states, without excessive cost to the taxpayers by employing economical, low-priced, but long-wearing surfaces. So long as an overwhelming majority of American farmers live on roads that are impassable during several months of the year there will be a serious road problem.

What Electricity Has Done

Increased wages and living standards are the direct result of increased industrial production which, in turn, is the result of application of power to work that was once done by hand or with clumsy, comparatively inefficient and dangerous machines.

Today the homes of persons of modest means have comforts and labor-saving devices powered by electricity that were undreamed of 20 years ago. And with the extension of power to rural areas the farm is receiving the benefits of the same high standards of service that have revolutionized industrial and social life in the cities.

Flexibility and economy are the keystones of modern electric service. It can be applied, with equal efficiency, to a large factory or a two-room apartment. It can do a multitude of tasks, great and small, quickly, economically and unfaithfully. It is available to almost every person in America. And cost is steadily decreasing in comparison to the cost of other commodities, while standards of service improve.

Electricity is the greatest power ever harnessed by man for his purposes. American industrial and economic preeminence and world leadership come from the vast progress made since the war in the development of electric utilities.

“ROUND TOWN”
---by Doug

There being only two or three nominations in so far this week, for my “Who’s Who”, I have decided to wait until more come in before naming them. Ye editor got rather peeved at me for wanting to tell something on two of our young men this week. Something about them entertaining friends from the country. He cut it out, and so you don’t get that gossip.

Who remembers when there were no stores where now stand the buildings of the Broadhead Market, Hugh Jones, Alabama Power Company, and Nettles Store. When “Daddy” Fox used that vacant lot for his auctioneer business, and when there was a basketball court there too. When there was a pool room where Evan Parrish now operates a produce business. When there was a Boy Scout organization in Clanton, with a good sized band. When services were held in a large wooden building behind the Woco-Pep Station, and when it was turned into a motion picture theatre. When there was only one newspaper in Clanton. What occupied the lot where now stands the Mullins Building, next to the Exchange Hotel. When massive oaks grew where Dief’s Service Station is now. What occupied the lot where the Baptist church is. When the post office building was once a two-story structure. Whose home occupied the place where the Palace Market, Powell’s Pressing Shop, are now located, and what once stood where the Dixie Cafe, Jones Place, and The Clanton Service Station is located. When willow trees, weeds and trash covered the lot where the large Ford building now stands so dignified. When the streets of Clanton were almost impassable during a rainy season. When a bucket brigade used to fight the fires. Where Upchurch Drug Store was first started, and how. The appearance of the old Methodist church, now replaced by a modern structure. When the steam whistle of Wade’s ice plant, gave fire alarms. When the ice plant furnished electric current for Clanton.

What wonderful things memories are. And then sometimes they are not so wonderful, especially when one brings back to mind the many opportunities he let slip by without taking advantage of them. Which makes one wish he could go back and live his life over again.

There was a time, when a boy or girl graduated from the Chilton County High School, they were grown, and now it seems that each year, the age is becoming lower in the graduating classes of the school. Even the teachers who are employed in our school have the appearance of pupils themselves. And who knows, that conditions may continue, until one will probably be born educated. Bringing it down to a finer point.

And then by that time, school teachers will no longer be needed, and will have to seek occupations as fathers or mothers, maybe.

Infants, as small and innocent as they are, have a wonderful influence on the nation’s business. Even some of our most outstanding citizens were once mere babies, who at one time, didn’t even have control over their various limbs. T. H. Neighbors was once a shiny headed innocent baby, and now look at him. Take for instance, John Page. Can you imagine him being, once upon a time, a little scrawny fellow, crying for comfort, or something that babies cry for. Fletcher’s Castoria became famous over the idea that babies cry for it. ‘A young baby, said by its fond young parents, to be destined to become a leader in the world, had the power to rise his father in the middle of the night, regardless of the temperature, or any obstacle placed in the floor and cause said father to step on a rattler or squealing doll, for the pleasure of getting his offspring a drink of water.

work should not attempt any repairs, as poor wiring and the misuse of electricity cause a huge fire loss annually. According to the National Board of Fire Underwriters, the damage from such fires in 1928 totaled over $18,000,000.

All wiring should be done in accordance with the National Electrical Code and by authorized electricians. This precaution, if followed, will result in considerable saving in property losses from fire, as well as in fewer deaths and injuries.

TELEPHONE PROGRESS

Present day life in America is absolutely dependent upon the telephone. In 1929, telephone conversations numbered 64,173,144, or an average of one call for every two persons, according to Department of Commerce figures.

During the year, approximately 900,000 new telephones were installed in homes, offices and other buildings, a new high record for any one year.

Extension of international communication was also an important feature of telephone progress in 1929, and a new service of telephone communication between shore and ships at sea was inaugurated.

During 1930, approximately $700,000,000, or nearly $2,000,000 a day, is being spent for new telephone construction.

Miss Willie Otis Wells was carried to the Woodlawn Hospital in Birmingham this week for an appendicitis operation.

Jack’s Question Box

Did you ever see a sophisticated politician, inebriated with the exuberance of his own verbosity, and gifted with an egotistical imagination, that can at all times command an interminable and inconsistent series of arguments to malign an opponent, and glorify himself?

Did you ever see people wrangle for Religion; write for it; fight for it; anything but—live for it?

Did you ever see Webster’s definition of the word, ‘Jackpot’?

Did you ever see this: ‘Of all the griefs that harass the distressed, sure the most bitter is a scornful jest.

Fate never wounds more deep the generous heart, than when a block-head’s insult points the dart.’

Do you know that laws are like cobwebs, which may catch small flies, but let wasps and hornets break through?

Do you know that he, who by aspersions throws a stone at the heads of others, hit their own?

Do you know: That happy is he born or taught. That serveth not another’s will; Whose armour is his honest thought, And simple truth his utmost skill?

Do you know that a certain dignity of manners is absolutely necessary to make even the most valuable character either respected or respectable in the world?

Do you know that Physicians, of all men, are most happy; whatever good successsoever they have the world proclaimeth, and what faults they commit the earth covereth! Lawyers hang their mistakes, so we are informed.

Did you know on July 5th, 1775, Benjamin Franklin wrote William Strahan this: “You and I were long friends; you are now my enemy, and I am Yours, Benjamin Franklin.”

Do you know that few friendships would survive if each one knew what his friends say of him behind his back?

Do you know that an open foe may prove a curse, But that a pretended friend is much worse?

Do you know that thy friend has a friend, and thy friend’s friend has a friend, and that you ought to be discreet?

Do you know that it has been said that ‘Governments exist to protect the rights of minorities. The loved and he rich need no protection—they have many friends and few enemies,’ if that’s true, why don’t the government protect the farmers from this republican prosperity and tariff oppression?

DEMOCRATS TAKE NOTICE

Mr. Charlie C. McCall came up to Clanton last Tuesday, stopping his car in front of the Court House on Second Avenue, and is said to have shortly gone in conference with L. H. Reynolds, the republican probate judge of Chilton County. Whether the hour conference was relating to the probability of Charlie being the next Governor, was not learned, however, the Democrats of Chilton County are taking note of the fact that Charlie had this conference, with the republican probate judge, also one, when the state examiner of accounts was here examining the county books. They are wondering what Charlie is going to start.

Orchardists Warned Against The ‘Quack’

Auburn, Ala., April 24.—Scrums and inoculations are valueless in ridding tree plants of diseases and insects, said Julian Brown, extension horticulturist at the Alabama Polytechnic Institute. The horticulturist made this statement when his attention was called to the fact that such treatments are being recommended and sold to orchard owners by several men operating in Alabama.

“It is understood,” Brown continued, “that these treatments are being given by boring a small hole into the trunks of trees and injecting the materials recommended for the control of insects and diseases. Several experiment stations have conducted experiments to determine the effect of materials so injected into a plant on the control or resistance to diseases and insects, and none of these results have indicated any degree of effectiveness. These treatments have been purported on the grounds of the effectiveness of such treatments to animals or human beings, but the structure of plants is entirely different and, in the light of the present information, such materials of sufficient strength to be effective on plants would surely kill and destroy the plant tissues.

“It is understood that fertilization and cultivation is also being recommended in conjunction with these treatments. Trees and plants will always respond favorably to such improved cultural practices, but money paid out for scrums and inoculations, for tree plants can not be expected to give any returns to the farmer.”

FARM TRANSPORTATION IS AN IMPORTANT PROBLEM

According to the American Farm Bureau Federation, improved roads have cut automobile operating costs from ten to less than seven cents a mile during the past few years.

In addition, our thousands of miles of paved highways have stimulated social contacts, accelerated business and industry and played an appreciable part in the progress of American civilization.

In most states adequate trunk highway systems are now in existence. The vital need is for a greatly increased mileage of improved feeder, or farm-to-market roads. But a small percentage of American farmers live on roads that are passable during all months of the year. As a result the farmer is cut off from his markets, and local merchants lose valuable business which good roads would bring them.

American agriculture deserves a fair deal. If there is a serious farm problem at present, good roads could materially help in solving it by increasing efficiency in farm transportation. This would be of great value to the town and city dwellers as well.

Every state should provide its rural sections with improved, all-weather roads as fast as the budget will permit.

PARTIAL SUN ECLIPSE DUE ON MONDAY, APRIL 28TH

Those who enjoy watching an eclipse should have their smoked glasses ready for Monday, April 28, when the eclipse of the sun to be visible in America this year will occur.

It will be total in parts of California, Oregon, Nevada, Idaho and Montana, and nearly so in other portions of the Northwest. Throughout the rest of the country it will be seen as a partial eclipse.

In states using Pacific time the eclipse will begin about 9:40 a. m., in Mountain states about 11 a. m., and Eastern states about 2 p. m., according to their respective times.

An eclipse of the sun is caused by the moon coming between the earth and the sun, while an eclipse of the moon occurs when the earth gets directly between the sun and the moon. Because of the irregular motions of the moon, exactness in predicting the time of the eclipse involves a highly complicated mathematical problem.

Yet modern astronomers do predict them within from one to four seconds of their actual time of occurrence and these predictions can be made 100 years or more in advance if desired.

Republican Loses Before Committee

Hoover's Choice For Judgeship

John J. Parker, of North Carolina, who was nominated several weeks ago, by President Hoover, to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, was rejected Monday, by the Senate Judiciary Committee, by a vote of 10 to 6. It is said that strong opposition developed to Parker's nomination, soon after the President had made known his choice, due to the attitude of Parker towards labor and the negro. The rejection of Parker's nomination, to the Highest Court of the country, by the senate committee, is said to be the first time such action has been taken on a president's nomination to that court, within the memory of the oldest attaches of the senate. It will be recalled that Chief Justice Hughes, did not get confirmed by the senate several weeks ago, without a bitter fight which lasted for several days, but the opposition to him did not gain sufficient momentum to block the administration's forces and he was confirmed by a substantial majority of the senate.

SAD BUT TRUE

"Some one suggests that the only way to drive is with the idea constantly in mind that the other fellow may be an idiot," says the Los Angeles Times.

This is sad but true. Recklessness seems to be part of the motoring code with millions of American drivers. And the inevitable result is that, every year, 25 or 30 thousand persons are killed and hundreds of thousands injured in preventable automobile accidents.

The tragic part of it is that the enormous annual waste of life and property is almost entirely unnecessary. The unpreventable accident is rare as the dodo bird. Someone is incompetent or reckless in the case of practically every collision, great or small between motor cars.

The blame may be laid in two places. First is the apparent indifference of many motorists to the fundamentals of safety. Second is the lack of strict licensing laws in most states to keep the incompetent and reckless off the road, and an accompanying lack of enforcement of modernized, common sense traffic codes.

PREPARATION FOR THE CHICKS

Inside of your brooder house you need some reliable means of keeping the chicks warm and healthy. Various brooding systems are used for this purpose. On the Pacific Coast many of the big-scale egg-farmers brood their chicks around long, home-made, concrete ovens that they call "Dutch ovens." There are commercial brooding systems of somewhat the same nature. The battery brooder works on the idea of keeping the entire brooder house at a given temperature by means of automatic heat control and forced circulation of air.

These systems are all designed for the purpose of brooding many thousands of chicks at a time and are worth your investigation if you are going into the business on a big scale. The system used by most poultry raisers, however, is the conventional hover type brooder, under which the heat is maintained by means of a coal, oil, or electric stove. It will pay you many times over to make sure you get a good brooder and one that is suitable for your purposes. Make especially sure your brooder is amply large, or your chick losses will be too heavy. Generally speaking, one standard 52-inch hover will take care of about 500 to 600 chicks. If you have bought your chicks from a reliable hatcheryman, he can give you valuable advice on this important subject.

Anyway, you will want to set the brooder stove up and have it in operation several days before the chicks are due. Have several brooder thermometers hung close around the edge of the hover to carefully check the amount and the constancy of the heat. It should be 95 degrees, 2 inches off the floor. Cover the floor with 1-2 inch of clean litter, either coarse sand, cut straw, or commercial peat litter mixed with oat hulls, and cover this with clean burlap sacks to keep the chicks from eating the litter the first couple of days. Provide two water fountains of the half-gallon size for each 100 chicks. Provide enough wire mesh, roofing, or heavy cardboard 12 inches high to form a circle about 20 inches away from the edge of the hover to prevent the chicks from straying too far from the source of heat at first. You now have the essentials taken care of and are ready to receive your chicks.

Enlarged Pores Show Neglect

By DORIS HALE
DuBarry Beauty Consultant

Of all the questions women ask me about beauty care, the query, "What shall I do about enlarged pores?" is asked more often than any other.

I know some elderly women—women in their sixties or even more—who have fine skins. They may be just lucky; I suppose some are. But, in most cases, you will find that women whose skins are fine in texture after thirty have cared for them faithfully. They have watched their health—tried to prevent a sluggish system and a sluggish skin. They probably use only the finest cosmetics. And instead of trying some different preparation each week, they've stuck faithfully to preparations that really benefited their skins.

Keep the skin clean! That is the great preventive of enlarged pores. Chemists have spent years in the preparation of creams that aid very much. Keep a jar of cleansing cream handy. Spread it all over the face and neck, working it upwards, of course. This cream may then be removed by a skin tonic and freshener that dissolves every atom of it, penetrates the little crevices in the skin, so fine that only a microscope shows them, and leaves your face fresh and sweet.

If your skin is oily—and that's the kind of skin that seems most inclined to large pores—there are gentle astringents that may be used to advantage after a soothing wash with a good soap in warm water. They tighten up the relaxed tissues; make the skin tingle. At night, when you remove the powder and dust of the day, be sure—very sure—that your face is clean before you go to bed.

If you are under par in health, your skin shows it, and large pores may result anyway. The only advice I can give you then is to see your doctor. He will suggest a diet and other regulations to build up your strength, so that your circulation and your skin will reflect improved health.

CAMPAIGN TO STRESS
EGG AS FOOD SOURCE

Auburn, Ala., April 17.—A systematic campaign is being launched in Alabama with a view to popularizing eggs on dining tables in homes, in hotels, in restaurants, cafes, and also dining cars and other places where people eat. Announcement of this is made by G. A. Trollope, head of the poultry department of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, who has been appointed Alabama chairman for "National Egg Week," May 1 to 7.

In support of the "National Egg Week" idea Prof. Trollope said that the American people are more direct and vitally interested in the production and consumption of eggs than any other single food commodity; and that the American poultry industry has reached a position of great magnitude, being one of the leading agricultural pursuits of the nation.

Last year it is estimated that the value of poultry and eggs produced in the United States exceeded $1,250,000.

Along with their economic importance Prof. Trollope said that eggs are extremely rich and well balanced in digestible food nutrients. They are also of exceptional value as a protective food because of high vitamin content.

"In view of these facts," said Prof. Trollope, "the consumption of eggs should be materially increased in the United States. Such will be in the interest of economy and health which are basic needs of the public."

In recent years the poultry industry as grown to big proportions in Alabama. Therefore an increase in consumption will serve to stimulate the growth of an Alabama industry.

Heflin To Start His Campaign Soon

Washington, April 18.—Senator Heflin, of Alabama, deprived of a place on the Democratic ticket because of his failure to support Alfred E. Smith's presidential candidacy, is going on the stump next week to appeal to the voters of Alabama for renomination as a Democrat.

The decision of the State Supreme Court upholding the ruling of the Democratic State Committee barring candidates from the party primary who failed to support the Smith ticket was answered today by the Alabamian with the notice that he will go to the voters.

"The failure of the Supreme Court to pass on the issue presented," said Senator Heflin in a statement today, "leaves the punitive, outrageous and vindictive provision laid down by the strangely-influenced 'Kaskollian' members of the state committee hanging like a pall over the 185,000 life-long Democrats in Alabama."

"There is nothing left for us to do now but appeal the case to the rank and file of the party. They constitute the supreme court of the Democratic party in Alabama, and I shall take the case to them confident of success."

Charley Foshee of Billingsley was noted among the visitors to Clanton Saturday.

The police in Hanley, Eng., spent two weeks trying to find a cruel father described in a newspaper and then learned the story was reprinted from an issue of 1826.

Pierre Lervin, an aged miser of Toul, France, was found starved in his hut, having died while counting his hoard of more than $15,000 in gold.

When Mrs. Lily Fletcher arrived in Folkestone, Eng., from France, she wore eight pair of stockings, and was fined for trying to smuggle seven of them.

THE THINKER LEADS MODERN PROGRESS

By JOHN G. LONSDALE
President American Bankers Association

THE greatest need of the world today is interpreters of our times—modern Daniels in agriculture, finance, politics, industry—who can see through the fog and haze that enshroud our difficult problems and advise, instruct, and influence those who are either limited or limited in their perceptions.

Through the interpreter, the John G. Lonsdale known situations are disclosed or puzzling conditions explained in logical light. The American people are so constituted that they can meet and combat any situation once it is known and understood. It is the unknown that comes like the thief in the night and brings disaster.

Some one has defined prosperity as something the business men create for the politicians to take credit for. But America's present-day prosperity can be defined as a product resulting from the business man's ability to study and to interpret. Huge corporations maintain research staffs and special bureaus to interpret the times for them. Disaster looms in the offing for any industry that goes blithely on its way day after day without due regard to significant trends in trade and business.

Keeping Up With Change
Leaders of finance have discovered that they cannot remain passive in an age when all the rest of the world is in a transitional stage. The modern banker not only must know about the changing styles in other lines of business, but above all must be alert to the transformations which are taking place in his own. He must be a man of keener, broader vision, because the order of the day is for larger units of service. Mergers and consolidations have taken place in great numbers. We now talk of billions where a few years ago we talked of millions. We have only begun our changes. What disposition is to be made of the many problems that they bring will depend in large measure upon our leaders, upon the students and the interpreters who can read accurately the signs of the times, so that we may base future actions and hopes upon their wisdom. The quickest way to go to the top is to go to the bottom of things, and let us hope that among them will be found many who will not only aspire to leadership but will be successful in reaching their goal.

MOTOR FUEL TAXES $431,636.454
IN 1929; ALL STATES NOW LEVY

The 48 state and the District of Columbia collected $431,636.454 in taxes on the sale of 13,400,180,062 gallons of motor fuel in 1929, reports received by the Bureau of Public Roads of the U. S. Department of Agriculture show. 46 states and the District of Columbia, a five-month collection in Illinois, and the collections of eight months in New York, Illinois and New York were the last state to adopt this method for part payment of the highway bill. The pioneer states—Oregon, Colorado, North Dakota and New Mexico—led the way in 1919. Now all the others have followed, but the tax did not become effective in New York until May 1 and in Illinois until August 1.

The average fee per gallon was 3.22 cents as against 3 cents in 1928. In the course of the year 20 states increased the rate of taxation either one or two cents. The highest tax per gallon was six cents; the lowest two cents. At the close of the year, three states had a six-cent tax; eight a five-cent tax; 19 a four-cent tax; one, Utah, a 3 1/2-cent tax; 10 a three-cent tax; and seven States and the District of Columbia a two-cent tax.

In Alabama total tax collections on gasoline and other receipts were $7,105,009; net gallons of gasoline taxed and used by motor vehicles, 178,162,903.

Hints For Homemakers

By Jane Rogers

ESPECIALLY during the winter, vegetables are likely to arrive in the kitchen a long time after they have been picked. A little sugar added to the water while boiling will help to restore the natural sweetness they have lost.

An easy way to shell pecans is to pour boiling water over the nuts, and let them stand for about a half hour. Then, when the shells are cracked, the nut meats can be removed with no trouble at all.

Correct measurements are essential for successful cookery. Read recipes carefully. Remember that one cup of chopped nut meats, for instance, and one cup of nuts, chopped, are two different quantities. Just as are one cup of whipped cream, and one cup of cream, whipped.

Visitors To Town

Suits Modern Speed

"AUTRE temps, autres mœurs" is an old French saying, which means "Other times, other ways." And this characteristically terse Gallic summary of one all-embracing fact applies not only to manners, morals, dress, deportment, diplomacy, customs, habits, even conversation and education, but also to foods. Could we, for instance, live as we do in this speedy Twentieth Century without canned foods? The mere fact that we put up more than 9,000,000,000 cans of them a year in the United States alone supplies the answer to this question.

Safe Celebrity

But this is a scientific age and the public demands not only speed but safety. So it sets its scientists to work to make sure that food that comes in cans is as safe and good for people as the forms in which our forefathers ate their food. The answers to this question are being published every day, and they are all in the affirmative. A recent editorial in "American Medicine," for instance, said in part:

"The food cooked in the factory cauldron is as safe as the food heated in the family kettle. The cleanliness of the commercial product is no less than that prepared by mother's hands. The stress and strain of modern living, the varying facilities in cooking, the increased varieties of foods available at all seasons have given an impetus to canning in the home, but even more so to canning outside the home. Canned foods, whether produced in the house or in the cannery, have proven their value, their nutritional usefulness, their economy and above all their safety for public health."

A good business man will not buy a farm or any property without first looking it over to see what it is worth. However, some will buy or loan money on land without an abstract.

Isn't it equally as foolish to buy a farm without looking it over as to buy it and not know whether the titles are good or not? Without an abstract you do not know where you are getting the land you look at or not.

Before investing in land in any way have an abstract made and be safe.

News From The State Capitol

Dr. J. N. Baker, prominent Montgomery physician, was elected state health officer of Alabama at the annual meeting of the Alabama Medical Association April 18. This action clears up the uncertain condition which has existed with reference to the leadership of the State Health Department since the death of Dr. S. W. Welch. Dr. Welch was regarded as one of the strong figures in public life in this state and his death caused a vacancy which was not easy to fill. Dr. Douglas L. Cannon, assistant state health officer, was first chosen for the post, but resigned after a brief period of service owing to ill health. The State Board of Censors then nominated Dr. J. J. Durrett, a native Alabamian and chief of the U. S. Division of pure foods and drug control, for state health officer. This action of the board was subject to ratification by the state medical association in annual convention, and when the association met it was found that Dr. Durrett was not eligible by reason of not having held membership in the association for five years as required by the constitution. Dr. Baker was then nominated and elected.

The new state health officer is a native of Virginia, and a graduate of the University of Virginia; he took post graduate work at Johns Hopkins, Baltimore, and the Massachusetts Hospital, Boston. He came to Montgomery in 1900. Dr. Baker is a World War veteran, having served as major in the medical corps, and organized the doctors of Alabama into a reserve corps. He was chief of Surgical service at the base hospital at Camp McClellan, and was transferred from there to become commanding officer of the evacuation hospital at Fort Oglethorpe. Upon his discharge from the army he resumed private practice.

News of Dr. Baker's election has been received with general expressions of satisfaction. It is pointed out that he has already had experience as an executive which adds to his qualifications for that position. Under his leadership the work of the state health department is expected to continue with the effectiveness which has already placed Alabama at the top of the list of states in public health work.

In addition to the election of a state health officer, four members were elected on the board of censors: Dr. A. L. Harlan, Alexander City; Dr. Sam Gordon, Marion; Dr. M. Y. Dabdent of the State Medical Association, Birmingham, and Dr. J. M. Watkins, Troy. Dr. W. G. Harrison, Birmingham, was elected president of the State Medical Association, and Dr. W. M. Salter, Anniston, was elected vice president for the northeastern district.

Editor News:

Just a few more words from this delightful little home place of Alabama. If you will drive your car just a little bit slow when you pass through our beautiful hamlet and use your eyes a bit on the lovely homes and interesting scenery you will agree with me that this is indeed a garden spot in which to dwell.

From a business point of view, you would be wonderfully surprised when you had gathered an idea of the quantity of live, hustling merchandise that is handled here, as well as to the wide and varied assortment of traffic. You can either buy or sell almost anything you will ever need in life here. The merchants say little, but believe me, they do their stuff in a most surprising volume. If they should branch out and do a little bit of systematic advertising there is no telling what would develop here in the way of trade. But it would not be so very surprising if you would look around a little and see how many prosperous farmers and others who reside with us and close neighbors to us, who do their trading here, and help to make South Clanton a veritable business wonder.

Such well known and successful men as Messrs. Ellis Mims, Jim Driver, Jodie Lansford, John Vinson, Willie Wilson; R. M. Smith, Jasper Edwards, Elbert Edwards, John Popwell, Willie Miner, Jasper Dennis, and a larger number of others whose names do not come to my mind just at the moment, and space would not permit mentioning all of them, all lend stamina and backbone to the business life here. Personally, I believe that South Clanton, in the person of Mr. Jasper Dennis, has the best informed and most practical farmer in the State, Auburn not excepted. He and Mr. John Popwell actually know their stuff when it comes to the real work of making a diversified crop.

Even Old Uncle Sam knows a good thing sometimes when he sees it, for he has two of our most outstanding and reliable men in his service. You know them and will agree with me. They are Grover and Grady Harris, and both own and occupy splendid homes here.

Money wisely invested in South Clanton real estate will double in five years if not sooner.

The young people here also engage in some safe and sane social activities occasionally. For instance last Friday evening they pulled off a real Wiener Roast. Did you ever attend one properly pulled off? For real fun, frolic and good eats the world can't beat a wiener roast. Following are some of the young folks who were on hand last Friday: Mr. Jesse Lee Headly, who was master of ceremonies and host for the occasion, Newton Popwell, Dolphus Harris, Alton Harris, Archie and Floyd Devaughn, Lester and Armon Jones, Buster and Johnnie Popwell, Howard Thomas, Evelyn Maddox, Flora Jones, Gertrude Harris, Chloee Nivens, Marie Frazer, Mrs. Bertha Thomas, Mrs. Henley, Velma Mims, Eunice Jones, Elizabeth Williams, Minnie Gray and Louise Headley.

The guests met at Mr. Henley's at 7:30 P. M. All were ready and they adjourned to a lovely pine grove near Cooper and the festivities began. All hands ate to satiety, frolicked until near midnight, when the cars were put into service and the entire party faded away and another big old time frolic had been enjoyed by every one present. Come over and see us sometime and get an eye-full of what Central Alabama has done for the world by building South Clanton.

Dr. J. N. Baker Distinguished In Profession

Montgomery Physician, New Health Officer, Is Native of Virginia

James Norment Baker, who Friday was elected state health officer of Alabama by the Alabama Medical association in convention, was born 54-years ago at Charlottesville, Va. He received his education in the common schools of Charlottesville and graduated from the University of Virginia and that institution's medical school. He took post graduate work at Johns Hopkins, Baltimore, and the Massachusetts General Hospital, Boston.

Following graduation from the Boston institution, Dr. Baker was an interne at St. Vincent's hospital, Norfolk, Va., in 1888-89. For the next 10 years he was surgeon in charge of the Plant System hospital at Waycross, Ga., coming to Montgomery in 1900 when he took charge of a similar institution. Not long thereafter Dr. Baker entered private practice.

During the World War, Dr. Baker served as a major in the medical corps and organized the doctors of Alabama into a reserve corps. He was chief of surgical service at the base hospital at Camp McClellan, now Fort McClellan, at Annapolis in 1917, being transferred from there to become commanding officer of the evacuation hospital at Fort Oglethorpe.

Upon his discharge from the army medical corps, Dr. Baker resumed private practice, specializing in female urology. He is at present surgeon for the Atlantic Coast Line railroad, the Central of Georgia Railway and for the Southern Bell Telephone company, in addition to his private practice.

As one of the state's outstanding medical men, Dr. Baker was honored repeatedly by the state medical association. He served as its secretary, 1902-14 and was elected president in 1915. He is a member of numerous other medical organizations, Phi Kappa Psi fraternity and various local clubs.

As the author of numerous outstanding works on female urology and surgery, Dr. Baker added distinction to the office to which his fellow members of the Alabama Medical society elected him. He is held in high esteem by residents of Montgomery.

Dr. Baker resides with his family at 602 South Perry Street.

HELPING YOUNG FOLK TO BECOME BANKERS

Through the American Institute of Banking, which is the American Bankers Association's educational section, the banking profession is educating 35,000 bank men and women in the technical and scientific departments of their work. These students are enabled by this institute, which is entirely non-commercial in its operations, to obtain a grasp of the finer points of banking without interrupting their employment or interfering with their earnings, in their bank jobs.

The courses given, including banking economics and law and bank administration in all the departments, have been worked out under the direction of senior college educators and the lectures are always given by practical men, such as lawyers in the legal courses, experts in banking operations and college professors in the economics courses. There are chapters with meeting rooms in over 200 cities and also a number of smaller study groups are fostered with correspondence aid.

It has been said that the A. I. B. is so familiarly known throughout the banking field, is the greatest adult educational organization in the world and is supplying the banking business with the largest supply of trained workers each year that any comparable line of business is receiving. The organization holds an annual convention attended by hundreds of young bank workers as well as senior bank officers actively interested in furthering the institute's educational work, at which numerous technical subjects of practical banking application are presented and discussed. This year's convention will be held at Denver, Colorado, June 16 to 20.

EXTRA POTASH PAYS

In demonstrations conducted during the past 2 years, 74 Alabama farmers used approximately 3 times as much potash as they had been using to cotton. The extra potash used in addition to the regular application was equivalent to 80 pounds of muriate of potash per acre. The extra potash returned $4.06 for each $1.00 invested. Extra potash keeps down diseases, reduces shedding, and makes bigger bolls. Extra potash pays when used under or around cotton. Ask your dealer for a nitrogen-potash top-dresser of extra potash planting mixtures, or mix muriate of potash with ordinary mixtures or nitrogen top-dressers. Potash is cheap and potash pays!

Some Reasons Why Chilton County Should Grow More Feedstuff During Coming Year

If the workstock, milk cows, and hogs actually on the farms of Chilton County, January 1, 1930, receive the feed they should have to keep them in thriving condition, it will take 24 cents out of every dollar's worth of cotton grown in the county in 1929 to pay for the feed that must be shipped into the county. This does not take into consideration interest on the money to pay this bill, time farmers will lose hauling this feed from town to the farm.

Furthermore, no feed has been calculated for beef cattle, calves, sheep, chickens, and stock kept in the towns. No farmer can prosper who must buy feed year after year.

Enough feed for every need should be the goal of every Chilton County farmer this year.

What Crops For More Feeds

Plant enough corn to make certain that a supply for the farm will be grown if the seasons are normal. Plant corn after winter legumes and do not add any fertilizers. If corn can not follow winter legumes side dress with 100 to 200 pounds of nitrate of soda or nitrate of lime 35 to 40 days after planting.

2. Grow two tons of legume hay per milk cow and two tons of legume hay or grass hay per mule.

By use of right crops properly fertilized on a small area of land a good supply of hay can be produced.

Six dollars worth of basic slag made $11.23 worth of hay in one year in tests run by the Alabama Experiment Station. Oats and Austrian winter peas were grown in the winter and soybeans in the summer. Basic slag increased soybeans from 950 pounds hay to 3875 pounds per acre.

What Hay Crops

For legume hay plant Oatootan or Laredo soybeans about cotton planting time at the rate of a peck or more per acre in rows just wide enough for one or two light cultivations. Do not sow soybeans broadcast and expect results. Apply 600 pounds of basic slag when planting.

For grass, hay, sow Sudan grass at the rate of 25 pounds per acre when danger of frost is past. As soon as the grass is up top dress with 100 to 200 pounds of nitrate of soda or nitrate of lime.

One hundred pounds of nitrate of soda increased the yield of Sudan grass hay 1900 pounds per acre and 200 lbs. increased it 3100 pounds. The least amount of Sudan hay made from either 100 or 200 pounds of nitrate of soda was 800 pounds in a very bad year.

ALABAMA BIRTH RATE DECLINES

Off In 1929 With Rise In Percentage Of Deaths

Dr. W. T. Fales, director of the bureau of vital statistics of the State Health Department, in a tabulation made public Friday in which he presents a comparison of provisional birth and death rates in Alabama for 1929 with the rates for the two previous years, shows that in 1929 the birth rate decreased slightly from the previous year, 1928; while the general death rate was slightly higher, 12.5 per 1,000 of population, against 12.4 for 1928. He states, however, that if the excess mortality from influenza during January was eliminated the general death rate for last year would have been slightly lower than that for 1928.

The chief cause of death was again disease of the heart, 136.3 per 100,000 of population. Influenza was second with a rate of 121.3 against 72.3 in 1928 and 30.4 in 1927. Chronic nephritis, pneumonia, tuberculosis, accidents and diseases of early infancy were the next most frequent causes of death.

Of the deaths from communicable diseases, it is noted that for the first time since 1916 there were no deaths from smallpox in Alabama. Further improvement was shown as to typhoid fever, the death rate being 7.5 against 9.4 in 1928. It is shown also that the death rate from pellagra showed a slight decrease and that there was a decrease in deaths from tuberculosis.

It is pointed out by Dr. Fales, though that on the other side of the scale, the death rate from malaria increased materially from 11.4 per 100,000 of population in 1928 to 16.6 last year. Deaths resulting from injuries received in automobile accidents also showed a considerable increase. These two increases and that for influenza are the only unfavorable record for 1929.

For the month of February of the present year, 4,822 births were recorded in Alabama and 2,449 deaths; the birth rate being 24.2 per 1,000 of population and the death rate 12.3. In Montgomery County the birth rate for February was 15.6 and the death rate 22.1. For Jefferson County the birth rate was 24.8 and the death rate 14.5. In Mobile County the birth rate was 20.8 and the death rate 19.6.

Pension Warrants Decrease Sharply

A year ago there were 1,537 Confederate veterans on the pension rolls of Alabama, while at the present time the names of veterans on the rolls total 1,221, the decrease shown in a comparison with 12 months ago and the present time being 316.

A year ago there were 6,388 pensioners in the aggregate, including veterans and widows of veterans, while on April 1 this year there were 5,668, the total decrease for the 12 month period being 720. Total of 404 pensioners, therefore, have died or moved away during the past year.

These figures are contained in a letter from State Auditor S. H. Blain to Maj. Gen. John R. Kennedy, of Tuscaloosa, commanding the Alabama Division of the United Confederate Veterans, answering one from Gen. Kennedy asking the state auditor to furnish him with a tabulation showing the number of veterans and the disbursement of pension payments for April 1, 1929, and a similar table for 1930.

Pension warrants which are now in the hands of D. W. Crosland, probate judge of Montgomery County, and are undelivered are: Mrs. Martha P. Bagley, Martin and Mrs. Ellen Shields. Judge Mrs. Virginia S. Lawson, Mrs. Mary C. Crosland requests that these parties call by the probate office to receive their checks.

PRaises U. S. PAPERS

American newspapers are more progressive than European in news-gathering and business methods, according to Dr. Wilhelm Giradet, publisher of a chain of newspapers in the German steel cities who was recently interviewed in New York. He said:

"You use three or four times as many reporters as we and your editorials are reduced to admirably simple terms. German editors devote much space to politics, which is always the most important subject in our country."

Regarding some of our American conditions and habits Dr. Giradet is not so enthusiastic. He thinks New York is not too skyscraper and too few parks. It was inevitable that he should touch upon the drink problem of which he says:

"I notice far more smoking and drinking among American women than among my own people. Another thing I can not help noticing that you drink too much coffee. Germany is the home of the 'kaffee-kiatsch' but we don't abuse coffee. I drink it in the decaffeinated form, which is genuine coffee but does not keep me awake at night and does not have a harmful effect upon my nerves."

Speaking of unemployment, which present a difficult problem in Germany, Dr. Giradet says that they give jobs first to men, and if a married man is employed they do not employ his wife. They first try to give a job to one person in each family.

So, while the noted publisher expects to profit by his observation of American newspapers, he feels that in some other respects the Germans employ better methods than ours. Anyway, his observations are interesting, whether we agree with him or not—Darnall's Service.

WILL ALABAMA MAKE RECORD APPLICATION OF FERTILIZER?

1930 will be a year of very great application of fertilizer, according to W. B. Griffin, chief clerk of the state department of agriculture, of Montgomery. To date of April 19, a total of 611,950 tons of fertilizer had been sold, according to tag sales of the department.

That this is a vast amount of fertilizer is shown by the following figures. The total amount of fertilizer sold in 1926, the year of greatest cotton crop, was 603,444 tons.

Already Year of High Sales

In 1928 the total tonnage of fertilizer reached the highest record of all time, 692,213 tons being disposed of.

Last year, the crop of 1929 consumed 675,350 tons of fertilizer. To date of April 19, the tonnage, according to tag sales has been 611,950 tons. Already this is the third largest year of fertilizer application. The sale of 64,000 tons would be needed to make 1930 a year of second heaviest application.

Farmers Believe In Fertilizer

The above impressive figures show that contrary to public opinion farmers are using fertilizer and are using it heavily. They are well aware of the fact that cotton and many other crops cannot be produced at a profit unless fertilizer is used and used heavily. The increasing tonnage of fertilizer used in the past five years is ample evidence of the heavier applications. It is in line with the general tendency of less acres and more per acre in Alabama.

Heavy Use Alone Profitable

A heavy use of fertilizer is also more profitable than a light use and those

FARMERS DO $15,000,000 CO-OP BUSINESS IN 6 MON.

Montgomery, Ala., April 3.—That Alabama farmers are applying the co-operative principle to the buying and selling of their products in large quantities was proved when Edward A. O'Neal, President, reported to the Executive Committee of the Farm Bureau that within the past six months the Alabama Farm Bureau has transacted a business of $15,000,000. This has directly affected 100,000 farmers.

Cotton has headed the list and Allen Northington, General Manager of the Cotton Association, reported that the association has received 150,038 bales of cotton which is worth approximately $12,000,000. This is based upon the 15.64 cents per pound which the cotton association is advancing despite the fact that this more than the cotton is bringing on the local market.

Poultry Brings $160,000

J. D. Moore and J. B. Sylvest, marketing specialists of the Extension Service, reported that 20,000 farmers have within the past six weeks loaded 52 poultry cars for which they received approximately $160,000. They report that the season is about one-half over.

The marketing specialists also reported that farmers in 37 counties have since the first of March pooled 912 cases, or 27,360 dozen, eggs on which they are receiving an advance through the various county farm bureaus of 20 cents per dozen.

"We have handled during January and February through the Live Stock Commission Firm, located at the Stock Yard, Montgomery, 943 cattle, 652 calves, and approximately 5,000 hogs. The volume of business since the firm opened in November is $243,795.41, Mr. Sylvest said.

Co-op Selling Grows

A. N. Culver, Secretary of the Mutual Supply Association, reported that cooperative purchasing of fertilizers, feeds, vetch and Austrian peas, windmills, soybeans, cotton seed, explosives, fruit trees, and spray materials, grain drills, and other miscellaneous products has amounted to $1,378,115.99.

J. A. Beaty, Director of Field Service, reported that since November 1st, 8734 insurance policies have been issued with face value of $1,576,000. During the same period 23 death claims have been filed and a total of $434,000 has been paid to the beneficiaries.

Credit Corporation Reports

N. Eric Bell, General Manager of the Credit Corporation, reported that up to March 15, that the Credit Corporation had made loans amounting to $153,733.38. He also reported that the Federal Farm Board has agreed to set up a new credit corporation to handle the business which they want financed and has appropriated $50,000 for this purpose. "Under this arrangement the total volume of business which we could re-discount for this year would be $200,000 which with the business already on the books would amount to somewhere close to $400,000."

farmers who plant less acres this year and who use heavily of fertilizer should reap greater profits.

Favorite Recipes of a Famous Baker

as Told to Anne Baker
By LOUIS DIAT, Chef,
The Ritz Carlton, New York

A dish with a real appetite appeal is offered by Mr. Diat in his recipe for Egg Plant à la Maitre d'Hotel as given here. The Maitre d'Hotel Sauce, too, offered a variation from the sauces usually used to spinach and other vegetable dishes.

Egg Plant à l'Orientale—Pare and cut a good-sized egg-plant into half-inch slices. Let stand in salted water for fifteen minutes. Fry them in four tablespoons of butter or olive oil. Make a sauce Portuguese by stewing for ten minutes one can of tomatoes with two tablespoons of butter and one tablespoon of finely chopped shallots. Add one tablespoon of chili sauce or ketchup. Cool slightly. Add yolks of eggs, two teaspoons of sugar, salt and pepper. Last of all bind with one tablespoon of flour mixed with one-fourth cup of water.

Spread a little of this sauce on the warmed dish on which the egg-plant is to be served. Arrange the slices and cover with the sauce. Besprinkle with three tablespoons of grated Parmesan cheese and brown one or two minutes under a hot broiler.

Maitre Sauce—This is a variation of Hollandaise sauce and is served with asparagus, spinach, broccoli, etc. Put the yolks of two eggs and an egg-sized lump of butter in a double boiler. Add one-half teaspoon of salt, a dash of cayenne, one teaspoon of lemon juice, four tablespoons of orange juice, and one teaspoon of powdered sugar. Be sure that the water in the double boiler does not touch the inner pan. Stir constantly but not too vigorously until the mixture becomes thick and foamy begins to adhere to the side of the pan.

Dear Sir:

I am herewith enclosing my formal announcement with you as Chairman of the Republican Executive Committee of Chilton County together with the $5.00 fee but I am not making the affidavit as to how I voted in the previous election. Clanton, Alabama
Dear Sir:

Your announcement and fee of five dollars with the request that I as Chairman of the Chilton County Republican Executive Committee, accept said announcement and fee as fully complying with the regulations and qualifications required to have your name placed on the ballot for the August 12, 1930 Republican.

In answer to same I beg to say, that under the requirements of regulations and instructions given to me by said Chilton County Republican Executive Committee, I cannot certify your name to the Judge of Probate as one qualified to go on the ticket on account of your refusal to file the oath showing how you cast your ballot in the last general election.

Yours very truly,
J. N. DENNIS,
Chairman Chilton County Republican Executive Committee.

"EXHIBIT C"

We, the Republican Executive Committee of Chilton County, Alabama, in session assembled on this 28th, day December, 1929, hereby pass and adopt the following resolutions:

1. We hereby call and order the primary election to be held with the state primary election on August 12, 1930, and hereby authorize and direct the chairman to appoint a committee of three to have full charge of the duties of the Executive Committee in doing all things appertaining to said primary election, and to hereby give said Committee appointed full power and authority to do all things necessary to comply with all laws appertaining to the arrangement and holding of said primary election, and this Committee in that behalf hereby ratifies and endorses the action of that said Committee.

We invite all qualified voters, regardless of their past party affiliations, who believe in the principles and traditions of the Republican party, and who pledge their sacred honor to support the nominees of such party in the primary, to come into our party and be one of us. However, we take this occasion to condemn, as unethical and dishonorable, the action of any voter in coming into our primary and then voting for or supporting the nominees of election. We believe that a voter the opposing party in the general entering a primary of our party and thereby pledging his honor should support the nominees of the party.

Be it further resolved that all candidates for office in the Republican party be qualified legal voters, as provided by law, and be it further provided that any voter desiring to become a candidate must state under oath how he or she voted in the last general election of 1928, that is, whether said proposed candidate supported the Republican ticket or the Democratic ticket, or voted a split ticket, and this oath must be filed with the Chairman of the Republican Executive Committee of Chilton County when they file for nomination, said affidavit to be kept on file by said Chairman and subject to inspection of any qualified voter, and said oath must be published in a newspaper published in Chilton County by said Chairman at the expense of such within fifteen days after the time for filing nominations has expired. It is further provided that the name of no candidate shall be placed upon the Republican primary ballot or be certified to the Judge of Probate, as provided by law, unless said oath is taken as above detailed.

It is further provided that all announcements must be filed with said Chairman on or before the first day of May, 1930.

Will Have Visiting Day At New Location Saturday,
May Third

Next Saturday, May 3, has been designated as visiting day at the new quarters of the Clanton Post Office, according to an announcement made this week by Mr. W. M. Bean, postmaster. Mr. Bean stated that between the hours of ten o'clock in the morning and three o'clock in the afternoon, the public is invited to come and inspect the new office, and work room and see the new fixtures and learn just how the mails for more than 7,500 people of Chilton County are handled. Mr. Bean also stated that he was authorized, through the courtesy of H. G. Boyd, president of the Peoples Savings Bank, to extend this invitation to the public. Mr. Boyd, it was stated has been largely responsible for the improvement of the local post office.

Mr. Bean is quoted further as saying, "After the office is moved from its present quarters to the new, the office work room will be closed. Strictly to the public, as it is a violation of the Postal Laws and Regulations to allow the public inside the work room of a post office building."

"With the new fixtures, excellent lights, and as good building for an office as any town of the size of Clanton, in the state, it is hoped that this office can be made the best in the state for a town the size of Clanton. I know that I may depend fully on the fullest cooperation of the entire office force here to assist to make the service at this office what it should be, and the co-operation of the public is asked that the office may give the very best service possible to all."

Your servant,
W. M. BEAN,

INFLAMMABLE LIQUID FOUND IN WELL IN CLANTON, TUES.

Quite a bit of excitement was created last Tuesday when a liquid, with an odor resembling that of kerosene was being drawn continuously from a well just behind the Dixie Cafe on Seventh Street.

On investigation, a representative of the News found that true enough, this kerosene-like liquid was being drawn from the well by buckets, and was being poured from the top of each bucket of water. When a lighted match was placed to the liquid, it ignited like kerosene does. Something like fifteen or twenty gallons had been taken from the well Tuesday afternoon. The well, which at one time considered one of the best wells in Clanton.

It is believed that some of the gasoline tanks from the numerous filling stations located on Seventh Street have started to leaking and the gasoline has seeped into a water vein leading to the well. There are approximately seven gasoline pumps with underground tanks located within three blocks of the well.

Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Billrey of Lawrence, Ga., were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Horsley White last week end, also their sister, Mrs. J. F. Bates.

Mr. Judson Strock of Verbena was in Clanton last Monday attending to business matters.

Local Cream Station Handles Over Three Hundred Pounds Last Saturday

County Agent C. E. Stapp announced this week that 316.5 pounds of cream was received at the cream station located at the office of the Chilton County Farm Bureau last Saturday.

The tests made of the cream varied from 19 1/2 per cent butterfat to 52 per cent and an average of 32 1/2 per cent and a total of 120.14 lbs. of butterfat. The most of the cream brought in Saturday was in small quantities. Mr. Stapp stated,

Checks issued to the farmers of the county for the above amount of cream amounted to $42.02. Mr. Stapp stated that of course this is only a small amount of cream compared to what could be saved and sold. He is anxious for a large number of farmers to plant sufficient feed crops to take care of a few extra cows, because he knows it is a profitable side

Several well known quartets and other singers are expected to be present and render selections, and an invitation is extended to the public to join in.

Republican Bar In Chilton Survives Attack In Court

Action of the Chilton County Republican Executive Committee in requiring all candidates to state under oath how they voted in the 1928 general election in order to get on the party primary ballot was sustained by Circuit Judge George Smoot, at Wetumpka, Tuesday, according to information. The matter was submitted on complaint of M. F. Lett, who sought a place on the ballot without complying with the committee rule.

A mandamus suit was filed and when case was called last Tuesday, it was postponed until Tuesday of this week, when the hearing was held on demurrers. Arthur Chilton of Montgomery and J. O. Middleton represented the petitioner.

Judge Smoot held that the committee had the right to fix such qualifications as it saw fit governing participation in the party primary as candidates and that the rule requiring information as to how the prospective candidate voted in 1928 was proper information for the governing body of the party to know, and not in violation of the law (continued on editorial page)

County Board Adopts Resolution At Meeting Held Recently; Asks Co-Operation

Following we publish a letter from B. Lawrence, Superintendent of Education, concerning Opportunity schools, state appropriation, etc., in which he gives out some important information:

The County Board of Education at its meeting held Friday, April 25th, unanimously agreed that in view of the fact the Board is in debt that every possible fund should go into the length of the school term. We are working hard to get on a cash basis and in view of this the Board passed the following resolution:

"Mr. Webb moved that the Board express its regret at not being able to provide the $696.25 necessary to secure the state appropriation of $1392.50 and the $696.25 Rosenwald for the Adult schools but that if the communities wishing Opportunity schools will provide one-fourth the cost that the

MAY CONTROL ELECTIONS

Large Expenditures Without Appreciable Results Cause
Tax Payers To Protest

One may, with reasonable safety, scout the thought that the independent voters of this county will be a controlling factor, in the forthcoming elections. By independent voters is meant those citizens of both parties who pay their own poll taxes and have a desire to see the county make progress as a whole, and abhor the idea of expending the public funds to pay political debts or expend it where only a few will be benefited. Those voters are beginning to resent the idea of political parties paying poll taxes for certain people who are not interested in their government sufficiently to pay the poll tax imposed by law. The idea prevailing with them is that a man or woman who will not pay their own poll tax and allows some one else to pay it for them, is to a great extent bound and obligated to vote as they may be dictated to by those who pay the tax and qualify them to vote. These independent voters have considered the action of the two parties, in prescribing the qualifications for candidates to run for office in the primaries, and judging the expressions of the voters, we are impressed that the independent movement is taking more force, than would hardly be expected this early in the game. On the republican side of the house in this county, one can see the old maneuvers going on. The same old ideas and tricks are being rehearsed and the so called ring making ready to administer to these republicans, who may not happen to belong to the ring, a good licking, on August 12, 1930. Some of the republicans are charging that the action of the Republican Executive Committee, was dictated by the ring, and that the committee acted arbitrarily, and un-American, when it (continued to back page)

NEGRO BADLY INJURED HERE
LAST MONDAY NIGHT

A negro, giving his name as Ralph Sledges, was picked up from the railroad tracks near the overhead bridge in Clanton last Monday night, unconscious. He was carried to the Central Alabama Hospital where it was found that he had received several serious cuts on the head.

When questioned at the hospital Tuesday, the negro would only give out such information as his name, and that he had relatives in Georgia, and had been in Clanton some time, however, other negroes who live here stated they did not know him, when questioned by officers.

Board will be glad to cooperate with them in securing the other three-fourths from the State and Rosenwald Funds."

Mr. Yates seconded the motion. Motion carried by unanimous vote.

One fourth the cost of a White Adult school is $25.00 and one-fourth the cost of a Negro Adult school is $16.25. Heretofore no Negro Adult schools have been operated but this year wherever they will provide the one-fourth cost they will be given a school. The other three-fourths cost of both white and negro schools will be paid by the State and Rosenwald funds.

The increased attendance in the schools of our county is very encouraging and we are glad to say that our attendance has increased about one-fourth (continued to back page)

ALABAMA POWER COMPANY

STATE LIBRARY BOARD SOUGHT

Bill Drafted To Create Commission

The Alabama Library Association in a called meeting at the Womens College Monday approved a bill drafted by its legislative committee and proposed for the next session of the Legislature which would establish a library commission in Alabama as a governing body for the continuance of work now being done by the association through a field worker.

Alabama, it was brought out in the discussion, is one of the few states that does not have a commission. The bill does not call for any specific appropriation, the committee to serve without pay and to have authority to appoint a director or field worker to supervise and aid in the establishing of libraries throughout the state.

Through private donations, a state contribution and money provided through the Rosenwald fund, Alabama for the past two months has had a field librarian in the state.

About 40 members attended the meeting. Miss Mary Martin, librarian of Auburn, and president of the association, presided. The members were welcomed by Dean L. E. Williams.

The proposed bill was presented by Mrs. Marie B. Owen, chairman of the legislative committee. Talks on the library work were made by Miss Norma Smith, of the State Department of Education; Charles W. Edward, Auburn; Miss Johnson, of Auburn; Alexander Moore, of Walker County; Miss Fannie Taber, field worker, and Marianna Martin, librarian of Walker County.

Pictures showing library extension work in other parts of the United States were shown during the afternoon. The members lunched at the college tea room.

REV. A. C. NELSON WRITES FROM NASHVILLE, TENN.

By Rev. A. C. Nelson
Nashville, Tenn., May 1.—Being just one of a group of 365 country preachers has its compensations.

For in addition to discovering that a rural preacher of Texas has much the same church problems as his brother worker of Indiana, it is also easy to find out that a Baptist preacher and a Lutheran preacher are pretty much the same under the clerical garb.

They are two of the things that several hundred rural ministers from all sections of the fourth annual Rural Church School conducted by the Vanderbilt School of Religion in Nashville, as a part of a project to put some vital program in the country churches of the nation; and when the 365 country preachers get back into their 365 country parishes, some rural congregations will have surprises in store.

Congregations are not the only ones who will benefit by their preachers' two weeks' stay on Vanderbilt's Campus, April 21 to May 2, for if plans of the school outlined here work out, whole communities, Methodist, Presbyterian, Disciples, and all, will have a unified community program.

The inter-denominational, inter-state character of the school now being conducted at Vanderbilt, is evidenced by the fact that 29 denominations and 24 states number representatives on the student roster.

Denominations represented are the Southern Baptist, Free-Will Baptist, Brethren, United Brethren, Church of the Brethren, Christian Congregation, Church of the Nazarene, Church of Christ, Church of God, Congregational, Disciples of Christ, Protestant Episcopal, Evangelical, Evangelical Synod of North America, Friends, Lutheran, Federated and Community, United Lutheran, United Evangelical Lutheran, Methodist Episcopal, Methodist Episcopal South, Moravian, Cumberland, Presbyterian, Presbyterian U. S., Presbyterian U. S. Presbyterian U. S. A. Reformed Presbyterian, United Presbyterian, Reformed Church, U. S. and Universalist.

Rural sections of the following states are represented: Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, North Carolina, Ohio, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, West Virginia and Wisconsin.

The Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary Located At Fort Worth, Texas

By Rev. Arthur DeLoach
Ex-Pastor Verbena Baptist Church

How did it come into existence?

It happened on this wise. Dr. B. H. Carroll, then pastor of the First Baptist Church at Waco, Texas, had been giving Biblical and theological instruction to the students of Baylor University. In 1901, a Theological Department of the University was organized with Dr. Carroll as Dean. In 1905 it became evident that a fully equipped Theological Seminary should be organized. In 1907 it became an independent institution located temporarily at Waco. In 1907 the Baptists of Fort Worth came to the conclusion that it would be a very desirable thing to have the Seminary in this city. The movement started and the Baptists of Fort Worth, under the leadership of Dr. L. R. Scarborough, pledged within thirty days, $100,000. At the same time some real estate men offered thirty acres for a campus and 250 acres of desirable land south of the city. Many other wonderful gifts have been presented from time to time. So came the wonderful institution into existence.

My readers will pardon me if I seem to preach in my discussion of the founder of this institution. Practically all I shall say of B. H. Carroll, who was the first president, will be quoted from a chapter on his life by Dr. Jeff D. Ray, who lived in Dr. Carroll's home for a number of years and possibly knew him as no other man did. May I make plain my reason for these quotations. I do it for one reason only. That is, that it may be an inspiration and help to those young people of Chilton County who really want to be somebody. Yes, to many of my personal young friends who I know have an ambition for a great useful life.

The first characteristic that Dr. Carroll's life that I shall mention is his consideration of men in low estate, his reverence for the average man. Dr. Ray gives many concrete examples, two of which I include, to illustrate that characteristic:

"An orphan boy who had no real claim on him fell sick in his home and for weeks hung between life and death with typhoid fever. The boy does not remember what took place during the delirium of the fever, although he has been told that during all that time this great busy man would take his place by the bedside and minister to the friendless orphan as tenderly as if he had been his own son. But the boy does remember that when he was convalescent, but unable to stand on his feet, this princely man would drag a portable bath tub into the room, bathe him from head to foot, rub him down and put him back in bed as gently as a mother. Do you wonder that for the intervening forty years that boy has loved him with all the passion of an ardent nurse?"

"Dr. L. R. Scarborough tells me that one day he said to him: 'Dr. Carroll, what was the greatest compliment you ever received?' After a moment's thought the good man said, 'when I was pastor I had a letter one Christmas from an old lady written in a very cramped hand, the grammar was poor and some words were misspelled, but in the letter she said, 'You have been my pastor ten years. I have not been able to do anything for you, but you have been a great blessing to me. I have no money with which to buy you a Christmas present much as I would like to, so I am just sending you this letter to tell you that after ten years under your pastoral care I am convinced that you are a good minister of the gospel of Jesus Christ.' Then looking down upon his young preacher friend, he said: 'Lee, I fear I did not deserve it, but I guess that is the highest compliment I ever received.' How sincerely he prized the good will and approval of the lowly."

Another charming quality of his was the chastened delicacy and refined gentility of his conversation: "Only last night, a good woman in whose home he had often been a guest, was speaking to me of the ease and naturalness and delicacy with which he could pay a compliment where it was deserved and where it would help. After thirty years of the most intimate association with him, I can truthfully say that I never saw him rude, or indelicate or discourteous to any human being, and I never heard him speak so much as one word that he could not have spoken with perfect propriety in the presence of his mother or his daughter. He was indeed a man of clean lips. I have seen him deliberately get up and walk away from a group of men when one of them said, 'I'll tell you a good story. It is a little smutty, but there are no ladies present.' He was inherently so sensitive and refined that coarseness was unthinkable for himself and intolerable in others."

Still another quality of this matchless man was the rejuvenescence in his own person of all that was good in the knighthood and chivalry of the middle ages. Another quality of this great man is his passionate, sacrificial, devotion to struggling and ambitious youth.

Such was the founder and first president of the Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary.

But we do not like to deal altogether with the past. The question will naturally arise, what of the man who is now president? As many doubtless know he is Dr. L. R. Scarborough, a man of altogether another type, but truly a great man.

Dr. Scarborough is preeminently an evangelist. I know of no man in the South who has done and is doing more sound and sensible work along this line than is Dr. Scarborough. They say, he is the greatest personal soul winner in the South. With all the responsibility of the Seminary upon him yet he has time to go with his fellow pastors in an effort to win one soul. Many business men of Fort Worth and other cities testify that it was Dr. Scarborough who led them to Christ.

Strawberry Crop At Moffett Farm Is Put At $30,000

The 160 prisoners composing the night working shift at the Kibby Cotton Mill, who were transferred to the Moffett State Prison Farm near Atmore, several weeks ago to help gather the bumper strawberry crop there, were brought back to Kibby Prison Sunday, the transfer being made under the personal supervision of Deputy Warden Frank A. Boswell, Jr.

The cotton mill night force is to be recognized and started back to work during the latter part of this week. Hamp Draper, head of the State Convict Department, said Monday. Some 150 men moved from Speigner prison to Atmore to aid in the berry picking, will remain there a few days longer. It will be ten days or two weeks yet before the gathering of this season's strawberry yield will be completed.

Mr. Draper estimates that some $30,000 worth of strawberries have already been marketed from the Moffett Farm.

FORESEES BETTER DAY FOR DAIRY INDUSTRY

Auburn, Ala., May 1.—After several months of depression a brighter outlook is seen for the dairy situation by A. D. Burke, professor of dairying at the Alabama Polytechnic Institute. He foresees a continuation of dairy development in Alabama and also in other southern states due to the improved condition.

Increased consumption resulting in a decrease in the amount of butter in storage is named by Professor Burke as a basis for optimism. While the supply of butter has been decreasing the ice cream season is beginning, and during the summer months large quantities of dairy products will be consumed in the form of ice cream, said.

"The situation in stocks of storage butter," said Professor Burke, "is much improved over what it was on February 1 and March 1. Storage butter of February 1, 1930, was reported at 6,230,000 pounds. This was almost 400,000 pounds more than was reported for the same date a year ago. March 1 this 60,230,000 pounds had been reduced to 46,513,000 pounds and the latest report for April gives the present storage stocks in the neighborhood of 30,000,000. This at least indicates remarkable improvement and yet it is still some 25,000,000 pounds in excess of what was reported on April 1, 1929.

"Prices of dairy products may not show much of an upward trend before fall. On the other hand, I am inclined to believe they will not go lower."

In an effort to hasten the coming of a brighter day for dairymen improvement work is being conducted throughout Alabama by county agents under the leadership of F. W. Burns, extension livestock specialist. One thing they hope to do is to increase the consumption of dairy products.

Brazil Translates Alabama Game And Fish Publications

J. H. Brunson, Professor of Fish Culture, Sao Paulo, Brazil, has advised Commissioner I. T. Quinn that the publications of the Department of Game and Fisheries of Alabama are to be translated into Portuguese and used as text books in the schools of Brazil.

Professor Brunson said that conditions in Brazil were deplorable, as the game laws of that country were not enforced and the bird population there as a consequence was very small. With the decrease in bird life there was an increase in insect life and corresponding increase in the discomfort of the citizens and in the loss to crops from destructive pests.

The letter reads as follows:
Sao Paulo, Brazil, March 29, 1930.—
Mr. I. T. Quinn, Commissioner Department of Game and Fisheries, Montgomery, Ala.

My Dear Mr. Quinn—I have received both your letter and the booklets, both of which I appreciate very much.

I am particularly interested in the new pond culture station that you are building. It agrees with my ideas concerning this type of fish production.

With the uncountable millions of insects and the warm climate throughout the year, Brazil would be a paradise for bird life, and at the same time the birds would make this country more of a paradise for human beings, by destroying the insects, if conservation measures should be not only enacted, but enforced.

With a certain class of people, it is and always will be necessary to maintain the iron hand of the law for enforcement, but on the other hand the great majority of the people are intelligent and can be taught that the wanton destruction of natural resources will in the end have to be paid for out of their pocket books. My idea was to appeal to this larger class of people through an educational program carried on in the schools of the country, hence the reason I wanted the information from you concerning the methods you employ for this work.

In the Interior there are some birds. But whenever you see a man, invariably he has a small bore shotgun with him and I know that the only bird that gets away is the lucky bird which he misses. They have some wonderful game birds here, but regardless of the law they are killed all the year.

I will give the pamphlets to the Government Officials and request them to have them translated into Portuguese with request for a Nature course in the schools, possibly much good may be derived from it and I thank you very much for passing the information on to me.

Yours very truly,
J. H. Brunson, Prof. da Piscicultura.

IMITATOR OF BIRD CALL MEETS DEATH FROM YOUTH'S GUN

Center, Ala., April 26.—A Sandroek farmer's ability to imitate birds has cost him his life.

M. M. Bishop, 57, the bird imitator, was shot and killed late yesterday by Bill Cagle, 15, a neighbor, as both were hunting for a hawk that had been molesting their poultry flocks.

Bishop, officers said, had hidden in a clump of bushes and sent forth loud whistles like an owl to draw the hawk, flying high overhead, within gun range.

The boy was nearby waiting for a chance to spot the same hawk, but ignorant of Bishop's similar mission. Bishop's hoot drew Cagle's attention and as the man moved in the bushes the boy fired.

The charge fired from close range, shattered Bishop's head and neck, causing his death several hours later.

Merokee County officials who investigated declared the shooting accident.

Bishop was widely known in this section as an expert at imitating birds.

News In Brief

The sale of motor fuel in the United States in 1929 amounted to 13,400,180 gallons and the government collected $431,636,454 in taxes on the sales. Alabama 178,162,903 gallons were sold and $105,009 was collected in tax. All states now levy a tax on gas.

Experiments in development of rubber-producing plants in the last few years have led to the discovery of shrubs that are much higher in content than plants used in previous experiments, said Thomas A. Smith. "I feel encouraged over the results of recent experiments," Mr. Smith declared. "Of course we have a long way to go, but we are getting on."

Latexwood, once thought to be a waste product, is now getting attention in another quarter. The cellulose industries, looking to annual supply much of their needs, see attractive prospects in the former rubber possibility, the weed having been propagated to show an acre yield of 30 bushels of seed, 280 pounds of floss, and a ton of air-dried stems.

With the production reaching unprecedented heights and exports achieving a record figure, the farm implements industry of the United States had its most successful year in 1929, the Department of Commerce announces. According to preliminary estimates, the total output for 1929 approximates $650,000,000, a record for all time, surpassing by some $125,000,000 the value of $525,000,000 recorded in 1928.

Joseph Kuhar, market owner in Kenosha, Wis., doubted the strength of his office safe and carried $1,500 home with him; next morning he found that burglars had cracked his empty safe.

DON'T SAY 'IT'S ONLY MEASLES'

By Dr. Christmas Seal

The year of 1928 was a tremendous "measle year" in Alabama, more cases than in many previous seasons. This happens every few years when a fresh crop of unmeasled children enter school.

Dr. Christmas Seal warns you that measles is always a dangerous disease. It is broncho-pneumonia, too often that ends the case of measles that do not do well—the cases that "run into pneumonia." If there comes a measles epidemic, you should be especially careful to protect children under three from its contagion. Should one of your children show signs of a bad cold, watery eyes, running nose, cough and slight fever, put him to bed and get a doctor. Quite likely it is measles. Keep him in bed for four days and the measles rash will develop. He will feel a lot better, and if all goes well, another three days will see him clear. But play safe. Keep him in for another week. Then he won't have broncho-pneumonia.

FORESTS HELP FARMERS

The cutting and marketing of wood products from their forest lands is scaring thousands of Alabama farmers through the current period of depression, says the State Commission of Forestry. This has happened before and probably will happen repeatedly in the future. The farmer is not overlooking the fact that on the nonagricultural portions of his holdings timber grows quite rapidly if given a chance and that a comparatively few years will change a stand from scrubby and unmerchantable growth to sizeable and merchantable material. Poles, piling and railway cross ties are the principal forest products that the farmers have been marketing during the past several months. Paper wood has also proved a life saver in some localities. With practically no cost to the landowner, yields of timber on areas not suitable for agricultural purposes are worthy of protection and care. If the woodlands are given decent treatment, the slight effort involved is repaid many times.

When his party began to drag Wilbur Schoett of Chicago turned in a fire alarm to revive the waning spirits of his guests by letting them "hear the bells ring." The judge gave him six months.

THE CHILTON COUNTY NEWS

BILLY SMITH Editor

Entered in the postoffice of Clanton, Alabama, as second class matter under the Act of Congress of March, 1897.

That Goodwill Atmosphere, Is It In Clanton?

A good-will delegate, how many are there in Clanton? How many of our citizens can be depended upon to spread the good will of Clanton along the routes they travel in their daily rounds? A good will delegate can be just as effective in his town as he can by going to other fields to work, and surely good will begins at home, and with good will prevailing in the atmosphere in Clanton, some of it will undoubtedly cling to those people who make up the large number of daily visitors to Clanton from other places, larger cities, causing them to carry that atmosphere to all corners of the United States. More people fear public opinion than anything else, and it most certainly is an influence that is easily made constructive or destructive for a town or an individual.

To fail in showing a good will toward those persons who come to our town, whether on business or pleasure, is to spread a destructive type of opinion, that is not usually forgotten or cast aside by those persons so readily. To bring to court some stranger to our town for some slight offense or just because he failed to please some influential individual here by some act of his, that perhaps could be taken care of by other methods and leave a sense, a feeling of good will between the parties concerned, is most assuredly an act that will result in nothing less than a feeling of ill-will of the stranger. And is that feeling of ill-will toward Clanton easily cast aside? That question could probably be easily and definitely answered should some citizen of Clanton make a slight boggle in traffic in Birmingham and be questioned by a Birmingham officer. This is perhaps due to the prevailing rumors that some officers from the Magic City were not met with good will when they were forced to answer to petty charges in Clanton not so long ago, making it necessary for them to make several trips to Clanton to get this matter straightened out, when no doubt a satisfactory agreement could have been arranged at their first appearance here, and it can not be said that these officers carried with them from our town a feeling of good will, taking under consideration the reported nature of charges against them and the incidents leading up to the charges.

Has it reached the point in Clanton that citizens of the town will allow friendship or business connections to cause a fluctuation in their dealing out justice and adhering to their duty, in the true sense of the word duty? Or is it because one is endowed with some influence and wishes to display it, thinking not of the other person's opinion or feeling, but only of his own satisfaction. And does one of that sort really reap any wholesome satisfaction by such acts as using his influence for his own personal satisfaction. Incident after incident could probably be pointed out right here in Clanton, where persons were made to suffer on account of some one wishing to use their influence. Employees who from all indications were giving satisfaction in their particular work, would lose their job, due to some insignificant person wishing to show that they had some influence, and what type of satisfaction, if any, comes of such acts? And too, there appears the question of good will, or ill will. Which?

Lack Of Courage Causes Waste of Talent

The courage to go ahead with what one thinks is right, is something which many persons lack, and this causes much fine talent to become wasted, merely for the lack of courage to begin. Who, if they could only have been induced to begin, would have done great things in life? The idea is, to do anything in the world that is really worthwhile one must not stand back, thinking of the probable dangers and failures, but jump in and scramble. A man can not be called a coward, if he tries as best he can. It will not do to perpetually be calculating risks and attempting to adjust chances, which reminds one about the story of the young man who wanted to do something, had his plans laid, and began to consult his friends, relatives, still waiting for perhaps a better chance, doubting the possibilities of success with his proposed undertaking, until finally he found himself so old he was unable to carry out his well laid plans due to his old age caused by the time he lost in consulting his friends, relatives and entertaining his doubts.

"Do you fear the force of the wind,
The slash of the rain?
Go face them and fight them,
He savage again.
Go hungry and cold like the wolf,
Go wade like the crane:
The palms of your hands will thicken,
The skin of your cheeks will tan,
You'll grow ragged and weary and swarthy,
But you'll walk like a man"

—Hamlin Garland.

Sad But True

"Some one suggests that the only way to drive is with the idea constantly in mind that the other fellow may be an idiot," says the Los Angeles Times.

This is sad but true. Recklessness seems to be part of the motoring code with millions of American drivers. And the inevitable result is that, every year, 25 or 30 thousand persons are killed and hundreds of thousands injured in preventable automobile accidents.

The tragic part of it is that the enormous annual waste of life and property is almost entirely unnecessary. The unpreventable accident is rare as the dodo bird. Someone is incompetent or reckless in the case of practically every collision, great or small, between motor cars.

The blame may be laid in two places. First is the apparent indifference of many motorists to the fundamentals of safety. Second is the lack of strict licensing laws in most states to keep the incompetent and reckless off the road, and an accompanying lack of enforcement of modernized, commonsense traffic codes.

"ROUND TOWN"
--by Doug

This is hardly a time to make resolutions, but I have made up my mind on some of the things I never intend to do again. Some of these are as follows: I never intend to attempt to repair my own radio. To stamp my foot at a dog, especially a large one. Begin reading a story without first seeing if it is a serial. Bless out a newspaper editor for something he didn't do, or did do. Answer the telephone after midnight. Try to make a living writing poetry. Befriend an unappreciable young lady. Ask a certain young lady for a date. Drink a Dr. Pepper before breakfast. Drive a car without good emergency brakes. Go to a dance without some money in my pocket. Sit up all night listening to a radio program. Attend an electrocution. Sit in the center of a row of seats in the picture show on Saturday nights. Go into athletic activities in a financial way. Pull a party at a hotel. Be too friendly to a stranger. Order veal croquettes at a cafe. Go to sleep while driving a car. Go on a moonlight picnic before the month of May. Wear a red neck tie. Buy a set of books on the installment plan, or take up the time of any book agent.

About all some people are fit for is to kick about something some person has done, or failed to do. They forget that most any ordinary mule can kick. And kickers are usually in the mule class.

Now that gasoline is being easily drawn from the well which belongs with the house that DeWitt Easterling rents from John Quincy Wade, I suppose they cannot decide just which will get rich quicker. And it's certain, somebody is going to save some money, cause the blame stuff will run an automobile, and I think there has been about twenty-five gallons taken from the well already. And still some of those filling station operators on that street better make an investigation, cause somebody is sure losing some gasoline.

Read an advertisement the other day, "You are paying for a Packard, so why not own one?" So now I see where our money is going to.

Since our Methodist and Baptist churches are continuously in need of funds, why not name our two bankers as some sort of collectors for church funds. Or maybe a better suggestion would be to stage some kind of entertainment and charge an admission. Folks nowadays are looking for amusement anyway, and besides a fellow can sleep without going to church. Maybe our "Nights Tempters" would come and sit up in the church again for us. People seem to like to see them do that thing. Why, I thought I was going to see something Easter night at the church, and after thinking about the thing quite a bit, I looked to see what Mr. Webster said a knight was, but he gave so many definitions, it was hard to suit our Knights to any of them. But you folks ought to come on out to church, sure enough. Don't let that dollar keep you away, the preacher said he had to borrow his to give. But maybe he stands in with our bankers better than some of us do.

And I am about to believe that the biggest fool in town can sometimes tell the wisest man in town something he doesn't know.

We've heard and seen so much about the "Womanless Weddings" being staged here, why can't we have a "Manless Wedding" some time? I'll bet that would be lots of fun. And to stir up some excitement in town to rid some folks of the Monday blues, I'd suggest two of our citizens having a gun battle from opposite sides of the street, using blank cartridge. And wouldn't that be the thing for some of the candidates here to do, in order to get some real publicity. You'd be surprised to see how business would pick up afterwards.

Somebody asked Ye Editor the other day why I didn't pick out the best dressed grammar school teacher. When he asked me about it, I replied that it would be a very difficult thing to do, but that I have been trying to do that thing for some time.

Delving into someone's humor not long ago, I managed to unearth some very amusing things. One, a letter from a correspondent from an imaginary country town. Here is some of the local news items: "A antique hunter has been in town moren a week, now. He says he is huntin' for a early American alarm clock. Lem Kinsey says they are all too early. Cy Attie has been wearing his ear muffs so much this winter that now he can't hear nothing without them. Cy, having been always listening to other folks business, may have to wear them all summer. To give his brindle heifer, Sarah Louise, better social conditions, the price of milk has been raised one cent a quart by Hooker Yaw. We pause the press to state that Life Whittler is announcing himself for Mayor of Oak Hollow. Life is already served three terms—two of them in public office. After moren forty years of happy married life, Sanday McDermoot is suin' his wife for divorce and alimony, she having washed the lather out of his shaving mug. Notice to hunters: If it ain't wearing a vest, a necktie, a mustache or a hat, and don't smoke a pipe, then it must be a pig, so don't shoot it. Ever since Zeke Hawley announced he had a case of neuritis, Poaty Idle has been hanging around, thinkin' it's some kind of new licker. While deer huntin' last week, Hokum Gunn said he got nine bucks. But Yilford Keer who was with him, said he got them in a crap game.

Did you see the Sun in partial eclipse, last Monday afternoon? Some one suggested that it was about to go republican.

Did you talk kind to your mule while plowing and working him, this past week and curry, water and feed him and think about how much hee he contributes to your living?

Did you know that the Commissioners Court of Chilton County, since January 1st, 1925, spent over a MILLION DOLLARS.

What would you say if you knew that officials sworn to uphold the law, had deliberately paid poll taxes for people who were not interested enough in the affairs of their government to pay their own taxes?

Can you give a good reason why Chilton County does not have a HEALTH UNIT?

Do you know that some one will be wanting to ride our mule, before the elections in August and November are over?

Do you know that the Republicans in Illinois, recently re-nominated Oscar DePriest, a negro, for Congress?

Do you know that Cheaha Mountain, in Clay County, Alabama, is said to be the highest point above sea elvel in Alabama, it being 2407 feet above?

Do you know that 'Magnesium' is the lightest known metal?

Do you know that an acre of ground contains 43,560 square feet and that one inch of rainfall on an acre would be about 27,143 gallons of water and would weigh approximately 226,512 pounds?

Has man seven senses instead of five? Two newly recognized senses in addition to hearing, seeing, feeling, smelling and tasting were claimed for human beings by Dr. Glenn S. Moore, Chicago, in an address at Cleveland, Ohio, in 1921. The new senses are 'muscle sense' by means of which man automatically co-ordinates brain and muscle, and 'Kinetic-static sense' in the semi-circular canals of the internal ear. All seven senses working in 'union,' says the doctor, maintains the body's perfect equilibrium.

The attorneys for the petitioner contended that, in view of the fact that no matter how the prospective candidate voted in 1928, he could not be barred from a place on the 1930 party primary ballot, the act was in violation of law.

The Chilton County Republicans opened the doors wide to all voters and candidates, but stipulated that the person who wished to receive party nomination must let the governing body of the party know his status as a Republican. The resolutions further declared that "we consider it unethical and dishonest for persons to vote in our primary and then vote for the opposition party in the general election."

GOOD ROADS PAY FOR THEMSELVES

A recent survey claims the average cost of operation for all motor vehicles in the United States has gone down to 6.43 cents per mile; including insurance, depreciation, tires, fuel and maintenance. On high type roads the average is but 5.44 cents; on low type, 7.5 cents. Thus good, smooth, long-wearing pavements pay for themselves in lowered automobile operating costs.

At present, the need of good roads is especially apparent in rural districts. Trunk highways are laid out to go from city to city by the shortest possible route. As a result, the majority of farmers, who it is estimated pay seven per cent of the total road tax, live on unimproved, dirt roads which are totally impassable during many months of the year.

Modern, yet inexpensive, hard surfaced farm-to-market or feeder roads give the farmer all-year-round contact with his markets and adjacent towns. They help relieve traffic congestion on main highways and stimulate social and economic relations.

A number of states, notably New York, have adopted rural road programs which should be emulated thru-out the nation. For every mile of main highway built, between five and fifteen miles of feeder highway should be built at the same time. In this way can progress be served.

Judge Hugh Locke Wants Clean House

By John B. Fitzgerald

Montgomery, Ala., April 28.—Judge Hugh A. Locke of Birmingham, Jeffersonian candidate for governor, added as many as 1,000 votes to his final count by his whirlwind campaign in Crenshaw, Clay and other counties during the last week according to his Montgomery friends.

Judge Locke stopped in Montgomery two nights during the week and each time he was in conference with friends and supporters. Present indications point to a growth in Jeffersonian sentiment, one of the most noticeable things being the voluntary assurances of support from ministers of all Protestant faiths and from men and women long active in the fight to "rid Alabama of the damnable affliction of liquor."

The Birmingham Jeffersonian is still detouring around a mud hole in the Democratic highway, and declares he will not stop fighting until he has "rid the Democratic party of the damnable affliction of the Raskobs and the Al Smiths."

Uncle Sam got out easy after all. It will cost him less than a billion dollars to build enough warships to comply with the disarmament pact.

Use a few drops of olive oil in oiling kitchen utensils such as the food chopper and egg beater. This is an excellent substitute for mineral oil which we naturally do not care to mix with our food.

To bring out the full flavor of your tea, add a lump of sugar when you put the tea in the pot to brew. The sugar opens out the leaves and makes the tea much stronger. The tea pot should be heated before putting in the tea and sugar.

The first thing to do in washing a woolen sweater is to wash buttons and buttonholes is to sew up the buttonholes. This will keep them from stretching out of shape.

Judge Locke Speaks At Ashland, Ala.

By John B. Fitzgerald

Ashland, Ala., April 28.—The coming here for an address on Friday night of Judge Hugh A. Locke of Birmingham is considered one of the most timely events in the present political campaign.

Judge Locke's masterly comparison of Democracy to the Old South with that fostered by Tammany Hall and now being offered Alabamians with Raskob sauce struck a happy chord with the 400 people who crowded into the circuit court room to hear his address.

The Jeffersonian candidate for governor came to Ashland Friday afternoon from Montgomery and Luerne. He had delivered five addresses in Crenshaw County the day before.

Judge Locke went to Lineville Saturday morning and spoke to an enthusiastic audience at the school auditorium. He delivered another address at Millerville in the afternoon en route to his home in Birmingham.

Potage St. Germain and Creme Washington offer a soup and a vegetable dish with just enough of the French touch to make them a bit more than an acceptable addition to the family menu. Here is the way Mr. Diat prepares them.

Potage
Saint Germain
—Wash well and soak for several hours one cup of split dried peas. Drain and plunge them into boiling salted water for twenty minutes. Chop coarsely one leek, one onion, and two carrots. Brown them in two tablespoons of butter. Drain the peas and add them to the chopped raw vegetables. Shred and add three green lettuce leaves. Pour over this four cups of white stock, which is made from veal or chicken. Cook slowly for one hour. Rub through a strainer one cup of fresh green peas which have been boiled in salted and slightly sweetened water for twenty-five minutes. Add this puree to the potage. Pass the whole through a tammy, or very fine sieve. Reheat. Just before serving add one teaspoon of melted butter, two tablespoons of thin cream and two teaspoons of sugar. Serve with small croutons fried in butter, or buttered and browned in the oven.

Creme Washington (Corn Cream)—Portions—Melt two tablespoons of butter and stir in two tablespoons of rice flour or cornstarch. Add slowly one can of corn. Stir carefully while it comes to a boil. Pass through a tammy or fine wire sieve. Add one cup of milk and reheat. Just before serving add one teaspoon of sugar and three tablespoons of heavy cream.

Dief's Tells More About Goodyears

"Regardless of where a Goodyear tire is purchased, whether it be in Clanton or in far off Australia or England, it will incorporate in every part the craftsmanship acquired by years of constant development and research," Dief's Service Station, local dealers for the Goodyear Co., says.

"The biggest and most widespread factory organization in the rubber industry is maintained to insure the uniformity of Goodyear Tires.

"The Goodyear Company has tire factories in Akron, O., Gadsden, Ala., Los Angeles, California, New Toronto, Canada, Wolverhampton, Eng., and Sydney, Australia; rubber plantations in Sumatra and the Philippines; a 35,000 acre cotton plantation in Arizona and seven cotton mills located in various parts of America.

"The rubber and cotton plantations and the cotton mills, in addition to supplying part of the vast amount of natural resources which go into Goodyear tires, serve as the laboratories for constant development of improved materials and products.

"Whether a Goodyear tire is made in England or the United States, it is constructed to meet a standard---the standard that has resulted in Goodyear supplying more than one-fourth of the entire American tire market.

"This careful emphasis on standardization, or uniformity of product assures the Goodyear dealer and his customers that when a tire of a given size is taken from the rack it will live up to the reputation established by similar tires taken from the racks of other dealers throughout the world."

State Capitol News

The big increase in Confederate veterans' pensions voted by the legislature of 1927 has made it necessary to draw heavily on the general fund of the state to meet the increased pension payments. Figures from the auditor's reports show that for two years of the Graves administration the general fund has been called on for more than two million dollars to pay Confederate pensions, this being the amount of such pensions over and above the revenue derived from the one-mill tax levied by the Constitution to go for pensions. Complete figures for the entire Graves administration are of course not yet available, but it is estimated that when the present governor goes out of office his administration will have paid, out of the general fund, in addition to the proceeds of the one-mill soldiers tax, approximately $3,000,000 in pensions. It will thus be seen that the heavy drain on the general fund of the state, which has been charged in some quarters to "extravagance" is in reality due, to the tune of several million dollars at least, to the increased pensions for the heroes of the Confederacy and their widows. It is doubted whether anyone in Alabama would call this sort of expenditure "extravagance."

Under the Brandon administration, Confederate veterans and their widows received the following pensions: veterans, $75 per quarter; widows in class 1, $27.50, class 2, $22.50, class 3, $18.50. The legislature of 1927 at the spring session first made provision for an increase in pensions on a sliding scale, the amount paid to veterans and their widows to undergo a gradual increase. At the summer session of the legislature, however, a movement was launched to give the veterans at once the maximum increase in pensions which they would have eventually received under the provisions of the bill enacted at the Spring session. There was no one who would oppose an increase in remuneration for the men who had fought for Alabama and the South in the Sixties, even though it was realized that the finances of the state would be hard hit by such increase. Accordingly, after it was thought that the pension question has been disposed of by the increase provided at the Spring session, and after the budget had been made up and the revenue bill adopted, the new pension measure was passed and approved. This bill gave the veterans and their widows the following pensions, effective October 1, 1927: veterans, $150 per quarter; class 1 widows, $75; class 2, $45; class 3, $30.

The effect of this doubling of pensions is shown in the auditor's report for the first full fiscal year of the present administration. In order that the situation be properly understood, it should again be noted that there is a state tax of one mill to take care of pensions, but, when the proceeds of this tax are insufficient to pay the pensions voted by the legislature, the increase must be borne by the general fund. For the fiscal year ending September 30, 1926, the last full fiscal year of the Brandon administration, the one mill soldier tax produced $789,455.95, and pension payments totalled $1,399,374, so that there was a balance to be paid out of the general fund of $409,918.05. Compare this with the first full fiscal year of the Graves administration, ending September 30, 1928, the year in which the increased pensions went into effect. For this year, the one mill tax yielded $1,081,978.75, while pension payments jumped to $2,289,802.50, leaving the sum of $1,207,823.75 to be paid for pensions out of the general fund. It will be seen from these figures that the first year of the present administration hit the general fund for some $800,000 more for Confederate pensions than was paid from the general fund during the last year of the preceding administration.

For the second fiscal year of the present administration, ending September 30, 1929, there was naturally a decline in pension payments, as the number of pensioners decreased while the payments to each remained the same. The figures show, however, that during this year the general fund was still called on to pay a huge sum in pensions, the figures being as follows: paid out for pensions, $1,992,149; one mill tax, $1,122,341.55; balance paid by general fund, $869,807.45.

In two years time, therefore, from October 1, 1927 through September 30, 1929, there has been paid for pensions out of the general fund, which is the amount paid in excess of the proceeds from the one-mill tax, the sum of $2,077,631.20. The present year will show a decline in pension payments, as the number of pensioners decreases. The above figures, it will be noted, however, embrace only two of the four years of the present administration. On the basis of these figures it is estimated that for the full four years the payment of pensions from the general fund will equal or exceed $3,000,000. This is one way the money goes which has apparently escaped general observation and comment.

Locusts have again descended upon Egypt. The present invasion is declared to be the worst in the memory of those living. Nearly all of upper Egypt is said to be infested as well as two provinces of lower Egypt, while the hordes are descending on the Sinai Peninsula like torrents, coming from Palestine and Transjordan.

The modern feminine desire for slenderness, according to Prof. James L. Boyle of Cornell University, has altered market standards of long standing, cut the consumption of bread 20 per cent, and reduced meat consumption.

The discovery of the Wisconsin experiment station that from four to eight times as much vitamin D (anti-rachitic) was carried by the milk cows fed 200 grams of irradiated yeast daily as is contained in normal milk is hailed as a discovery of great value to the dairy industry. It is pointed out that persons suffering from a lack of vitamin D have need for milk which is exceptionally potent in it, and that the discovery may have considerable value from a commercial as well as a health standpoint.

Thin, Pale, Weak

"I HAD been through a bad spell of sickness which left me very weak," says Mrs. Virginia Spruce, of Stapleton, Va. "I was pale and felt lifeless, and my strength did not return."

"I spent most of my time on the bed. I was very nervous, and the least thing upset me. I did not have strength enough to lift a broom. At times I would have bad headaches, which would hurt me until I could hardly see. "Someone asked me why I did not try Cardui. I had read of it, so I thought I would see what it would do for me. It was really remarkable how I came out. My strength returned, and my health was better than it had been in years. I gained in weight about ten pounds. My color was good, and I ceased to suffer from headaches. I have told my friends about Cardui because I was benefited after taking it."

DRUDGERY IN THE HOME

Fourteen million five hundred thousand electric flat irons are now smoothing out the wrinkles in American homes while nearly 6,000,000 vacuum cleaners are making those same homes more cleanly, according to figures recently made public.

We are also told that there are now 1,500,000 electric refrigerators in use in the approximately 20,000,000 homes equipped for electric service. These wired homes, in which electricity in some form is used, represents a greater part of all the homes and farms in the country.

Which would indicate that we are well on the way towards the elimination of as much as possible of the drudgery of the home.

Strange to say, this does not seem to be the case. The Society of Electrical Development points out that only 12.5 per cent of available electricity production is consumed in the home.

No doubt when the average American housewife finally realizes how much of the drudgery of her home work can be taken away by following the lead of her husband, who uses in his factories and his office every possible labor saving device, there will be a different story to tell.

For the present, however, it would seem that, while the work of our men is being steadily made lighter by the adoption of these modern inventions, the conservatism of our housewives is keeping them at the handles of their brooms and other backbreaking instruments of ancient vintage. FERTILIZER AND POISON ARE "COOPERATORS" GROW COTTON

Although the cotton farmer is accustomed to getting returns of from three to six dollars' worth of crop for each dollar's worth of fertilizer used, he can still afford to consider the adoption of any practice which will further increase the efficiency of the added plant food. Such a practice is poisoning to control the boll weevil, for sections where it is or may become a serious menace.

That poison adds to the effectiveness of fertilizer is shown by the results of an interesting experiment conducted by the Alabama Experiment Station for the past six years. In this work comparisons have been made of the yields from different rates of fertilizer, with and without poison treatment. The six year average yields without fertilizer are 115 pounds of seed cotton without poison and 158 pounds with poison. Below are shown the increases in seed cotton, with and without poison, for the different rates of fertilizer application. The fertilizer used was approximately a 15-5-5 grade.

500 lbs.	321	453	132
1000 lbs.	632	909	277
2000 lbs.	966	1238	272

The increases for the poison treatment indicate the extent to which the practice was profitable for the different rates of fertilizer treatment. It appears that the effect of the poison remains about the same after rates of 1000 pounds of fertilizer per acre are reached.

The effects of increasing the quantity of fertilizer also are significant. It will be noted that 1000 pounds gave almost exactly twice as large increases as 500 pounds of fertilizer, both with and without poison. "These results show in a conclusive manner that fertilizer and poison are strong 'allies' in the fight against low yields and high costs," according to county agent C. E. Stapp. The use of one of them in no way lessens the need for the other.

Farmers of Chilton County have made their investment in fertilizer under the cotton. Poisoning is one way of protecting that investment, or of increasing the returns from it.

Hints For Homemakers

By Jane Rogers

INK stains can be removed from the fingers by rubbing with a cloth moistened with household ammonia. Rinse the hands in clear water, afterwards. Lemon juice is an excellent remover of rust stains from white fabric.

For a delicious sauce to be served with fish, such as broiled sea bass, mix together the juice and grated rind of one lemon, two tablespoons sugar, and the well-beaten yolks of two eggs. Add gradually to one cup of strained fish stock which has been placed in a double boiler over the fire. Stir constantly until the mixture thickens. Pour the sauce over the fish just before serving.

The chickens are not to be fed for some time after they are hatched, and usually they are not put in the brooder until they are old enough to take their first feed. The right time to feed is variously estimated. At rate, we would recommend not to feed before 36 hours, or later than 72. The chick is nourished by the unabsorbed yolk within its body for the first two or three days after hatching.

When you do put the chicks in the brooder for their first feed, however, you will want to have the water to be mentioned before filled with warm, clean, fresh water, at a temperature of about 90 degrees. The feed, a good "chick starter mash" should be set before the chicks, sprinkled on board trays or on paper plates. This should be kept before them at all times and will be their only food for the first week.

Many dependable commercial starter mashes are on the market. The main thing is to get wholesome ingredients, unmix with chaff, refuse products, etc. You can buy a mash that is recommended by a reliable hatcheryman or you can mix your own. The following formula is recommended by the Western Washington experiment station and is widely used:

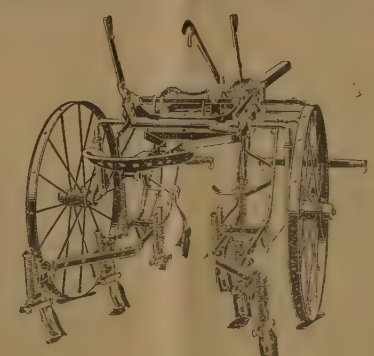

- 40 lbs. ground yellow corn
- 10 lbs. ground wheat
- 5 lbs. ground oat groats
- 15 lbs. wheat bran
- 5 lbs. alfalfa leaf meal
- 5 lbs. meat scrap
- 5 lbs. fish scrap
- 10 lbs. skim milk powder
- 2 lbs. steamed bone meal
- 2 lbs. oyster shell flour
- 1 lb. salt
- 2 lbs. (1 qt.) cold liver oil.

A starter mash of this kind is to be left before the chicks constantly for the first twelve weeks, although after the first week a scratch grain and other items should also be fed.

Throughout the first week be sure to keep plenty of fresh water, slightly warmed, before the chicks, changing it two or three times a day. Brush up all droppings and dirt daily. The burlap sacks can be removed from the top of the litter after two or three days, when the chicks have become accustomed to eating their mash. Important: Keep the temperature under the edge of the hover, 2 inches off the floor at an even 95 degrees, day and night. If the chicks pile up and die, something is wrong with the heat. They are comfortable and right when they are evenly distributed and form a sleeping ring within a few inches from the outer edge of the hover.

Lowering Cost Of Producing Corn

A study of crop statistics for the five-year period (1924-1929) shows that Alabama farmers plant annually approximately three million acres to corn and its equivalent in other grains from which they harvest 14 bushels per acre, or a total of forty-four million bushels. This production lacks close to thirty million bushels, or 9.5 bushels per acre, supplying the farm needs of the State. To buy this corn from outside the State requires an expenditure of $32,835,000.00 annually. This sum represents $10.43 for each acre planted to this crop.

Based on experimental results in Alabama the above shortage could be produced on the same acreage now planted to corn by applying a side-dressing of 100 to 200 pounds of nitrate of soda per acre. Experiment Station results show that the yield of corn can be increased from 12 to 14 bushels per acre by the use of 200 pounds nitrate of soda at a cost of forty to fifty cents per bushel.

Mr. W. H. Gillespie, Clanton Route 5, will conduct a corn fertilizer demonstration this year to show that proper fertilization of corn is profitable. On five acres he will side-dress the corn with 200 pounds Chilian Nitrate of Soda 35 to 40 days after planting. He will leave one-fourth acre that receives no fertilizer in order to know what the increase will be. Every farmer in Mr. Gillespie's section of the county should watch this demonstration.

The Chilian Nitrate of Soda Educational Bureau is furnishing the soda for this demonstration and is conducting it in cooperation with Mr. Gillespie and County Agent Stapp.

A "First Aid" Dinner For the Hostess-Cook.

By JOSEPHINE B. GIBSON
Director, Home Economics Dept.,
U. S. J. Heinz Company

It is quite a simple matter to entertain dinner guests when one has plenty of help with the preparations. Many of us, however, must be hostess, cook and waitress combined; and entertain in a thoroughly enjoyable manner then becomes a very genuine problem.

Happily, there is a wealth of prepared foods, such as delicious Cream Soups, Relishes, Luncheon Dishes, Puddings and Desserts that one may purchase ready for serving with only a few minutes' preparation. These are a priceless boon to the busy hostess; and the matter of serving the meal attractively without assistance calls for only a bit of careful planning.

One thoughtful woman recently gave a dinner for which the several courses were combined in quite an interesting manner, so that the meal was most attractive while the work of serving was materially lessened. Following is the menu that she used:

Individual Assorted Relishes
Stuffed Pork Chops
Baked Potatoes
Hot Muffins Currant Jelly
Surprise Cup Cakes
Coffee

The relishes which are usually good with pork, were placed on the table just before dinner was served. They served as appetizers and also did away with the necessity for a salad course. The entire dinner was on the table and the hostess did not need to leave her guests until time to serve dessert. These appetizing relish dishes, were arranged as follows: Small open sandwiches were spread with soft Cream Cheese. Stuffed Olives were cut in eighth lengthwise and placed as a border on these sandwiches. A center decoration of the pimientos from the Stuffed Olives was placed on each of these dainty sandwiches.

This is only one suggestion, and you may use olives in many other ways as a garnish. On the plate with these sandwiches were mounds of Sweet Midset Greens in small lettuce cups, stalks of celery stuffed with Sandwich Relish, and hard cooked green beans and topped with Mayonnaise Salad Dressing. Many similar combinations will suggest themselves to the ingenious housekeeper.

The Stuffed Baked Pork Chops were prepared as follows:

Stuffed Baked Pork Chops

Purchase four pork chops and have the butcher cut pockets in them for the stuffing. To 1½ cups stale bread crumbs add 3 tablespoons melted butter, ½ teaspoon salt, a few drops of onion juice, and ½ teaspoon Worcestershire Sauce. Mix thoroughly and stuff firmly into the pocket in each chop. Sprinkle very liberally with salt and pepper, and brown in a skillet. To 1½ cups water add 2 tablespoons Tomato Ketchup, and pour 1 3 of this around the chops. Place in a moderate oven and bake until tender about 45 minutes, basting with the remainder of the water and Ketchup. When finished there is a thick rich sauce in the pan, which should be poured over the chops before serving.

Hot muffins add so very much to a dinner that they are worth while even when one begrudges the time it takes to make them. They may be mixed and put in the pans several hours beforehand and baked just in time to be hot for dinner.

Surprise cup cakes were a delicious dessert:

Surprise Cup Cakes
½ cup butter; 2 3 cup sugar; 1 egg well beaten; ½ teaspoon vanilla; 1 ½ cups flour sifted with 2 teaspoons baking powder; ½ cup milk.

Cream butter and sugar until light and fluffy, add egg well beaten, and mix well. Add 1 ½ cups flour sifted with 2 teaspoons baking powder, alternately with the milk. Then add vanilla, and bake in a well-greased and floured muffin tin in a moderate oven (375 degrees) for 25 minutes. Cool, cut a slice from the top of each cake, and remove part of the center. Fill with Apple Butter or Fruit Filling, and replace the top. Sprinkle with confectioners sugar or top with sweetened whipped cream, and serve with hot coffee. This batter, baked in very tiny muffin tins and filled with preserves, makes a delicious tea dessert.

Controls Are Given For Garden Insects

Auburn, Ala., May 1.—Voicing the hope that gardens of Alabama may be protected from the ravages of insects, W. A. Ruffin, extension entomologist, and Julian Brown, extension horticulturist, gave recommendations on the control of a few of the worst insects.

For the cucumber beetle they recommend that a mixture of one pound calcium arsenate and 20 pounds land plaster or gypsum be applied as a dust while the plants are still small. This may be done with a duster or by shaking from a cheesecloth sack. In addition, they say that the seed should be planted thickly and thinned later in order to secure a perfect stand.

One of the worst insects is the Mexican bean beetle and they recommend spraying with a mixture of one pound magnesium arsenate and 50 gallons of water or dusting with one pound calcium arsenate, one pound dusting sulphur, and four pounds hydrated lime. These materials should be applied only to the under sides of the leaves, they say.

The same materials used for the Mexican bean beetles are effective against the bean leaf beetle and should be applied as the first leaves are being formed.

They also gave a spray and dust for aphids, or plant lice. The spray may be made by mixing one teaspoonful of nicotine sulphate, one inch cube of soap, and one gallon of water. The dust may be used as recommended by manufacturers or prepared at home by mixing thoroughly 8 ounces nicotine sulphate with 12 pounds hydrated lime. Cabbage and collard worms and the Colorado potato beetle may be controlled by the use of lead arsenate or calcium arsenate, one pound with five pounds hydrated lime.

WORLD WAR LEADERS

Reviewing what has happened to the great leaders of the World War, a recent writer notes the fact that among them all Hindenburg alone today occupies a high place in world affairs. Rounding out five years as president of the German Republic on April 26, he is still active at the age of 83, with two years more to serve.

Of the other great military leaders, Foch, Haig, Cadorna, Diaz, and Grand Duke Nicholas of the Allies, are dead, as are also Moltke, Falkenhayn and Hindenburg of the Central Powers.

All the prominent living generals of the war, are in retirement, including our own Pershing.

Among the political figures of 1914-1918, only Lloyd George is still active. And he no longer holds an important office. President Wilson, Czar Nicholas, Emperor Francis Joseph, Premier Asquith, Premier Clemenceau and Chancellor von Bethmann Hollweg are dead; Kaiser Wilhelm is in exile.

Thus briefly runs the story to date of those who guided the movements of more than 65 million mobilized fighting men, of whom 10 million died and 20 million were wounded, in a struggle which changed the map of the world.

Miss Joan Wright of Dover, Eng., was fined $150 for smuggling, $150 for impertinence to customs guards and $150 for lying to the court.

Four times a month Mrs. Clara Nelson of Paignton, Eng., places food on the grave of a woman friend who died two years ago.

Farm Bureau Helps Farmers Get Gov. Aid

Answering the question "What is the farm bureau doing to help its members get the benefits offered farmers by the Federal Farm Board?" Mr. W. L. Popwell, president of the Chilton County Farm Bureau today said:

"During the past season the cotton association cooperated with the Federal Farm Board and made it possible for the association to advance to its members 15.64 cents per pound despite the fact that cotton during much of this period sold on the local markets much below this price. During the season the cotton association received something over 155,000 bales of cotton.

"Recently the Farm Board cooperated with the Farm Bureau and Farm Bureau Cotton Association in setting up the Alabama Agricultural Credit Company. The purpose of this company is to advance production credit to Alabama cotton farmers. In order to obtain money through this company the farmer makes application to the credit company and if the loan is approved the farmer is advanced the credit. The Farm Board loaned the cotton association $50,000 which it invested in capital stock in the credit company making it possible for the Credit Corporation to increase its loans by some $200,000.

"At present the farm bureau is making arrangements giving Alabama farmers the opportunity to pool their wool and draw 90 per cent of its value when it is delivered. The wool is then stored in the United Wool Growers Association Warehouse in Baltimore, where it is graded, insured, and sold through the National Wool Growers Association, the central sales agency for all wool cooperatives of the United States. This will make it possible for Alabama wool growers to pool their wool and sell it along with the wool pooled with the other wool cooperatives of the country.

"At present a national livestock agency is being organized by the Federal Farm Board, and plans are being made by the Alabama Farm Bureau for livestock producers of the state to receive benefits of this national organization.

"As the farm board extends its services to the commodities produced by Alabama farmers the farm bureau, in cooperation with other agricultural agencies expects to bring these services to Alabama producers. Out of the eleven groups of farm products designated by the farm board as commodities, seven directly affect Alabama farmers. In this entire program the farmer will use his county farm bureau as a clearance for his needs as to production loans, facilities and marketing."

In addition to this the farm bureau is working with the department of agriculture, the agricultural college, the experiment station, the extension service, and other governmental agencies in helping farmers solve their problems. Members of the farm board have expressed their desires that this be done, Mr. O'Neal said.

"I won't accept it," explained M. Dorothy Morrison of Belfast when awarded $50 in a breach of promise suit. But she did.

James Tott, aged 56, and thrice widowed, must pay Miss Alma Grant of London $1,500 for breach of promise.

Postman John Jones of Minford, Wales, has retired after walking 168,324 miles in 40 years' service.

Testifying against Miss Flora Agnew charged with disorderly conduct, Mrs. J. C. Clayton of Chicago said the young woman's "language was as thick as the paint on her face."

Chilton County Abstract Co.

M. D. FOSHEE, Manager

A good business man will not buy a farm or any property without first looking it over to see what it is worth. However, some will buy or loan money on land without an abstract.

Isn't it equally as foolish to buy a farm without looking it over as to buy it and not know whether the titles are good or not? Without an abstract you do not know where you are getting the land you look at or not.

Before investing in land in any way have an abstract made and be safe.

Chilton County Does Honor To The Hen

Chilton County farmers and poultrymen will cooperate with other counties throughout Alabama in the observance of "National Egg Week" from May 1 to May 7, according to C. E. Stapp, county agent, who said that a campaign will be launched in the county with a view to popularize eggs on dining tables in homes, hotels, in restaurants, cafes and other places where people eat.

Reviewing the importance of all observing National Egg Week, the farm agent stated that the poultry industry in Chilton County has made a rapid growth in the past few years until last year farmers and poultrymen of the county sold and ate over $236,000 worth of poultry and eggs. "An increase in the consumption of eggs and poultry will stimulate growth in the Chilton county industry," the agent declared.

At the same time that Chilton County pays homage to the hen the entire state and nation will be doing the same. Edward A. O'Neal, president of the Alabama Farm Bureau Federation, and G. A. Trollope, head of the poultry department, Auburn, said that all citizens of the nation, including the student, the investigator, the educator, the poultry leader who organizes group activities, the poultry farmer, the distributor, the store keeper, and the consumer, are being urged to assist in increasing egg consumption during the week of May 1-7.

Last year Alabama farmers and poultrymen ate and sold some $22,000,000 worth of poultry and eggs, and the value of poultry and eggs produced in the United States exceeded $1,250,000,000.

Few persons probably realize that in 1927 eggs and poultry furnished the second largest amount of cash to the Alabama farmer, says P. W. Gist, state and federal statistician. It ranked 4th in farm production value being exceeded by only cotton, milk and corn. It should be remembered that eggs and poultry rank high in cash income because a large percentage of the birds and eggs are sold by farmers whereas a larger percentage of the milk and butter is consumed by the farm families.

Statistics compiled by Mr. Gist show that 7,656,000 chickens with a value of $3,157,000 were sold and slaughtered in 1929. During the same year 55,223,000 dozen eggs were produced with a value of $17,671,000.

To promote the poultry industry of the state farmers each year market some $400,000 worth of poultry cooperatively through their farm bureau. They also store a large quantity of eggs cooperatively in the spring and hold for better prices in the fall. In addition to this a large number of them feed according to recommendations of the Poultry Department of Auburn by purchasing their feed cooperatively from their farm bureau. Thus farmers have a safe program in poultry production and marketing.

IN MEMORY OF LEVELL KEENE WHO DIED ON APRIL 21ST

On Monday, about 12 o'clock, the Death Angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Abe Keener of Alpine community and bore away the spirit of their beloved son, Levell, to its home on the Great Beyond.

He was sick only a short while with stomach trouble. He died in the hospital at Selma.

Levell was a good and kind young man. He belonged to Alpine church. He always spoke a kind word to everybody and everybody was glad to hear him talk. He will be greatly missed at home and everywhere he was known.

He leaves to mourn his loss a father, mother and one sister, and six brothers, besides a host of friends and relatives.

It was hard to give him up, but God knew best and took his soul for sweet rest.

Weep not, dear friends and loved ones, of his absence. He is standing at the Golden Gate with an outstretched hand bidding us to come, live with him in yonder promised land.

His body was laid to rest in Alpine cemetery with Rev. J. E. Moore officiating, with Brislin Brothers in charge.

Darling, Levell, he has left us. Left us, yes, forevermore. But we hope to meet our loved one On that bright and happy shore. Written by one who loved him, H. C. GRAY.

The young Italian student-pastor of the Italian church in Ensley, who preached at the Baptist church last Sunday evening, was heard with a great deal of interest by a large congregation. It was a surprise to many to know how large the Italian population of Birmingham and its environs has come to be.

Those who attended the services at the Congregational church Sunday morning greatly enjoyed the solo, "God's Garden," sung by Miss Esther Johnson.

The Ladies Aid Society of the Congregational church will hold its monthly social with Miss Leech and Miss Jenkins at the Dining Hall next Thursday afternoon. The operetta "China Silk" which filled the program of the last meeting of the Helen Keller Literary Society attracted a good sized audience on Saturday night, and a well pleased audience as well. The choruses were surprisingly good, considering that only a very few of the singers had ever taken part in anything of the kind before and the costuming and stage setting added much to the effect.

Mrs. Butler's class in Health Work for Girls finished the text book with the end of the fifth term and began searching for more worlds to conquer. At the suggestion of their teacher they secured permission to spend the last term in the study of birds of Alabama and are beginning their work with high anticipation.

During "Clean-Up Week" Miss May Stoddard offered a prize of a dollar to the student who would produce the best slogan to embody the hopes of the cleaners for permanent improvement. The prize was awarded in chapel Monday morning, being divided between Eunice Williamson, whose slogan was, "Make Thorsby the Neatest Town in the South," and Frank McMurray who proposed, "If You Love Beauty, You Will Keep Thorsby Clean."

Welcome visitors on Sunday, though their stay lasted but a few minutes. I were Mr. George Hughes of the class of 1925, his mother, Jerdan Bell, who was a student here two years ago, and Mary Giles Stallings, a younger sister of Cathryn Stallings. They were driving to Tuscaloosa to visit Mr. and Mrs. Payne Bryan, both former students of the Institute. Cathryn Stallings joined the party here and Mr. Herbert and Miss Bessie Hughes in Birmingham.

HEFLIN OPENS CAMPAIGN WITH HUNTSVILLE SPEECH

Huntsville, Ala., April 26.—U. S. Senator, J. Thomas Heflin, today opened his campaign for reelection in a rally of "independent" voters from Madison and adjoining counties with an attack on the 27 members of the State Democratic Executive committee who voted for the resolution to bar all persons as candidates from the Democratic primary on August 12, who did not support the Democratic ticket in 1928. Senator Heflin declared those 27 members voting for the resolution had "fallen under the sway of the Roman Catholic hierarchy and Roman Tammany plotters."

MACEDONIA MAN CUTS TOOTH AT AGE OF 62

Pine Level, Ala., April 26.—The age record for cutting teeth probably belongs to Jessie L. Rawls, of the Macedonia community, who confesses to the cutting of a wisdom tooth at the age of 62. Mr. Rawls, who is now 69, had been wearing a plate for a number of years, believing himself entirely without natural teeth, when one day, without warning, a roughness appeared under his plate. Going to his dentist, he learned that it was not the bit of bone he had supposed it to be, but a perfectly good new tooth. His dentist cut a notch in the plate to fit around it and it makes his place fit so snugly Mr. Rawls counts it the most valuable tooth he ever had.

SUPTS. ADOPT SIGNIFICANT RESOLUTION, RECENT MEET

County Superintendents of Education, in session recently, adopted rather significant resolutions according to Superintendent B. Lawrence of this place. The resolutions follow:

Recognizing the fact that educational progress in Alabama during the last four years has attracted the attention of the nation due to the provision of a minimum seven months rural school term for counties qualifying for the state aid, due to additional funds which partly meet the tremendous public demand for better high school facilities due to a special fund which encourages more complete and more regular school attendance, and due to the great improvement of college and university facilities for operation and maintenance,

Recognizing the facts that 11,000,000 more days of public school attendance are recorded in 1929 than in 1926, that 46 more accredited high schools attempt to bring secondary education to the rural youth than in 1926, that 132 more consolidated schools have been developed to give modern, decent, training which approaches the standards of towns and cities, that higher education is in a position to furnish a leadership which will literally "put Alabama on the map," and that the expenditure of state funds for education is more scientifically planned and more closely supervised than ever before in history,

Recognizing and gladly acclaiming this progress,

Be it resolved by the County Superintendents of Education in convention assembled as immediate and personal representatives of 600,000 children in attendance upon our schools:

First, that we express to state executives, legislators, and other officials our appreciation of the confidence and progressive spirit which has translated the will of the people into effective action.

Second, that we recognize with gratitude the sound and forward-looking spirit of Alabama citizens which brooks no opposition and fears, no obstacle in providing a fair chance for every child in the state.

Third, that again we challenge our people with the tested truth that prosperity, good government, culture, industry, and education are inseparable, and that nearly every civic ailment in the state, political, economic, and social can readily be traced to a lack of the best in education.

Fourth, that as superintendents of the training of rural children we clearly and urgently call attention to these three major needs of our 600,000 pupils:

1. A lengthened term for several rural centers in each county. A seven-months term suffices only for the parents whose poverty or lack of understanding causes them to agree to inferior schooling for their children; and at present hundreds of rural schools are "pieced out" to nine months by personal donations, a system which has definitely vicious aspects.

2. A fund for transportation of pupils to improved school centers. Alabama has never provided a dollar for transportation; and the burden of attempting to meet the demands for improved schools is embarrassing every county board in the state by reducing the available income originally intended for teachers' salaries.

3. An increase in state aid for rural schoolhouses. The present pittance of $4,800.00 per year for each county will hardly pay for repairs and is merely an encouragement to local donations for buildings. Rural people have no special fund or form of taxation for school buildings which does not subtract directly from the operating money needed for the minimum school term.

Fifth, that we urge every school administrator to give to the people the actual facts concerning conditions and needs of his school system and to call on the public for the needed changes and improvements.

County Board Adopts Resolution

third during the past four years. This increase in attendance has necessarily called for more teachers. This has increased our pay rolls every month and of course has a tendency to decrease the term as long as our funds remain constant. We feel that the children of the county should have as long term as it is possible and we trust that the people of the county will cooperate with us in our efforts to do this and that the public will take into account the fact that the Board is trying to get on a cash basis and will consider this as demands are made on the Board for service.

During the next year we will expect every teacher to carry the maximum teaching load. All appropriations to buildings and equipment will necessarily have to be discontinued and every community will be expected to provide the necessary buildings and equipment.

It seems that many people still think of the taxes revoted last winter as something new. At the time these elections were held we made it very clear that it was not a new tax we were voting but that we were simply revoting the taxes we had had in the years previous. The only thing we accomplished in the elections last winter was the matter of making it possible to equalize the apportionment of the district taxes. The Board has already agreed that this shall be apportioned to each school on a per capita basis of attendance.

Another matter which does not seem to be understood is the questions of why this has not already been done. The reason for this is that the elections held did not apply to the year which is just closing but becomes operative at the beginning of the next scholastic year. Hence this year's program could not be effected.

Trusting that we may have the co-operation of every citizen of the county in our efforts to make the school monies go as far as possible and that while you see a minimum of seven months school in other counties that you are taking into account the fact that Chilton County has not voted the amount of taxes had in other counties and that not only is this true but that you will remember that $900,000 is being spent in the other counties of the state which Chilton County does not share in, and pledging you our very best services with the funds in hand, I am,

Yours for better schools,
B. LAWRENCE
County Supt. Education.

New Executive Officers Named By Power Company

Birmingham from 1908 to 1915, when he was appointed Assistant Attorney General of the State, serving until 1918. He then became a member of the legal staff of Alabama Power Company, and has served in various capacities, including that of Assistant to the President and as a member of the firm of Martin, Thompson, Turner and McWhorter.

Mr. Stanley came up from the ranks, entering the service in 1909 of the utility company serving Huntsville and serving successfully as manager at Attalla and Huntsville, Manager of the Power Company's Northern Division, General Manager of Gulf Power Company at Pensacola, and Manager of Sales at Birmingham.

Entering the Power Company's service in 1917 as Superintendent of Maintenance, Mr. Middlemiss' ability earned for him early promotion to Superintendent of Distribution and later to Vice President of Southeastern Engineering Company.

Vice Presidents E. A. Yates, O. G. Thurlow, W. E. Mitchell and W. J. Henderson, who have taken up other activities, presented their resignations to the Board.

Messrs. Yates and Thurlow also resigned as directors at the annual meeting of the stockholders on Monday, and Messrs. Turner and F. P. Cummings, the latter of New York, were elected in their stead.

Other transactions of the Board were of a routine nature, Mr. Martin said.

school team defeated the well trained team of the Simpson High School on their diamond in Birmingham. The final score showing Clanton with six and Simpson with 3. Paul Cox, for Clanton, pitched a mighty good game, and was wonderfully backed up by the entire team. Benson Simms managed to get three hits from Simpson, Cox one hit, Robinson one, Nivens one, Maddox two, P. Busby one and Johnston one, while the Birmingham team got only six hits to Clanton's twelve. Go out and see our boys in action this afternoon, when they play the Marion team.

Independents May Control The Next Election

passed a rule that the candidate must file an affidavit stating how he voted in 1928, general election.

Mandamus proceedings have been instituted by a certain element of the republican party seeking to have the courts strike down that rule and it is this element of the republican party, who the so called ring, is sharpening their political weapons to carve on, when the day of the primary arrives. The most effective weapon, wielded by the so called ring is perhaps the hydraulic silver pressure, which is scientifically applied giving results that astound as well as moves some of those who are usually counted as being solid, as the Rock of Gibraltar.

A race in the republican party that carries with it some interest, is that between the contestants for the sheriff's office. One of the contestants waging an active campaign for the women and prohibition votes, another after wets, dries, or any kind that can vote, while another of the contestants must have been assured that he will have the backing of the ring, for he is going on canvassing with an air of confidence, as to the results.

Another race among the republicans, which promises to develop some interesting angles is that between Hon. P. M. Pitts, and A. A. Jackson, for the legislature. Many of the friends of Mr. Jackson, contending that the members of the Commissioners Court should be elected by districts, instead of from the county at large, and that Mr. Pitts had an opportunity to put over that measure in the last legislature and did not do so, and that Mr. Jackson, should now be given an opportunity to try his hand at the law making body of Alabama. And it is further advanced by the friends of Mr. Jackson, that he is a farmer, and that the farmers of this county should have one of their members in the law making body of the state to advocate their cause, in important legislation which no doubt will come up for legislation, when that body meets next January. The friends of Mr. Pitts contend that he should be re-elected, for that he waged an unceasing fight in the last legislature, to save the county when the Democrats in their effort to establish a board of revenue, were defeated by a few weak-kneed Democrats, on the Committee on local legislation.

The race among the republicans, for the office of tax collector and as-essor seems to be a neck and neck race by all contestants at this stage of the game, but as stated before the so called ring having decreed that definite things must happen, there are some who have an expression of confidence, which seems to be based on things of intrinsic value, and unless the independent voters in the republican ranks turn things up side down, the decree will be carried out, to the letter and the writer is doubtful, at this time, what will happen.

Seeing figures in a newspaper gives some folks the political Saint Vitus dance, but for the benefit of those who are running for nomination in both parties, for membership on the Commissioners Court, we give you the amounts that the commissioners court expended, as shown by the county treasurer's reports, during the last past five years.

Expended during year 1925, as follows:
General funds $ 74,877.43
Road funds $ 76,885.45
Gasoline funds $ 29,658.35

Total for 1925 $181,421.23

Expended during year 1926, as follows:
General funds $ 49,281.34
Road funds $ 62,800.91
Gasoline funds $ 44,846.74

Total for 1926 $156,928.99

Expended during year 1927, as follows:
General funds $ 71,863.60
Road funds $ 60,555.48
Gasoline funds $ 50,296.60

Total for 1927 $182,715.68

Expended during year 1928, as follows:
General funds $ 71,863.60
Road funds $ 60,555.48
Gasoline funds $ 50,296.60

Total for 1928 $182,715.68

Expended during year 1929, as follows:
General funds $134,502.96
Road funds $150,916.19
Gasoline funds $ 43,839.39

Total for 1929 $329,258.74

TOTAL EXPENDED DURING ALL ABOVE YEARS $1,010,866.94

A study of the above figures will reveal the cause of many of the tax payers of the county, complaining that the county is spending large sums of money—wrenched out of their pockets—and not getting any appreciable returns. The candidates for members of the commissioners court, owe the tax payers the duty to tell them the condition of the county financially, and should tell the voters how our public funds have been expended, in the past, and whether they will, if elected improve or change them. The voters should demand that candidates be nominated who fairly understand the county affairs, and who are in sympathy with improving our Health, Educational and Moral conditions, and who will outline a permanent road building program in the county, and carry it through.

PARTIAL SUN ECLIPSE WAS VIEWED BY MANY HERE

A rare phenomenon of the skies, a partial eclipse of the sun, was visible to Chilton County residents Monday afternoon and thousands of persons peered heavenward through smoked glass during the period to see the moon's shadow blot out a portion of the blazing sun.

The eclipse reached its peak at approximately 1:30 p. m., but was visible to local observers for three hours.

A faint shadow in one corner of the sun was the first sign of the moon's approach across the path of the sun. As time passed the shadow grew in size until it covered approximately 36 per cent of the sun's surface.

Size Varied Over World
In other parts of the world the eclipse was complete for a short period of time, entirely darkening the surface of the sun, while in other sections it was less pronounced than in this section. Astronomers elsewhere took to airplanes at strategic points to photograph the various stages of the eclipse.

Clanton observers of the eclipse gave varying reports of the size of the shadow cast when the moon took the prerogative of passing before the sun, but opinions of qualified astronomers were that 36 per cent of the sun was darkened.

The clear skies and bright sunshine proved an invaluable aid to those who had equipped themselves with smoked glasses or used photographic plate to observe the phenomenon.

The reports from the sheriff's office continued with Henry Davis, negro, being arrested, after a quantity of liquor was found in his house in Westland. He was placed in jail, later making bond. The officers making the above arrests were Sheriff Collins, Will Culp, George Murrah, W. B. Foshee and Loss Robinson.

Samuel Cooper, negro, who stated that he lives in Verbena, was arrested early last Tuesday morning just on the outskirts of Clanton, by county officers according to information given the News, and was found to have had in his possession two gallons of whiskey. The negro was brought to Clanton and placed in jail.

Miss Howard stated that she expects to reopen her beauty shop here sometime next week.

Ruling From State Regarding Employers Of School Children

There are 5896 school children in Chilton County. Vacation time is approaching and some of the older boys and girls are no doubt planning to look for a vacation job. The State of Alabama requires that employers have certificates on file for all employees under 17 years of age. This applies to children who are working for their parents with or without compensation or who are working for tips only as well as children on pay rolls. Every boy and girl who is going to work this summer must secure a vacation certificate. These certificates may be secured at the office of Mrs. C. E. Stapp, Chilton County Child Welfare Superintendent. This office is open on Mondays and Saturdays, and on Thursday mornings.

The following groups of children are eligible for vacation certificates:

1. Boys, 12 years of age and over, may work eight hours a day between 8 a. m. and 7 p. m., six days a week, in business offices, mercantile establishments, in and about dairies, or as caddies on golf links, provided they secure special employment certificates.
2. Boys and girls 14 and 15 years of

VISITORS MAY INSPECT CITY WATER WELLS, ETC. SUNDAYS

According to a statement from M. C. Smith, superintendent of the water works department of Clanton, those persons who wish to be shown through the pumping station and filtering plant of the city, can do so, at any time he is at the station. He also stated that on Sunday afternoons, he will be at the station between the hours of three o'clock and five o'clock, and will be glad to show anyone through and explain the workings of the plant.

TWO CASES DISPOSED OF IN MAYOR'S COURT MONDAY

Two cases were tried and disposed of in Mayor Hart's city court last Monday morning. Otto Williams, negro, was fined $5.50 and costs on a charge of violating traffic laws, the information stated.

Henderson Sawyer, negro, drew a fine of $5.50 and costs on a charge of speeding, it was stated.

WARR WILL BE RETAINED AS PRINCIPAL

Is Highly Praised For The Improvements Made While Here

At a meeting of the county board of education held recently at the court house here, it was stated that Prof. L. C. Warr would be retained as principal of the Chilton County High School for another year.

Prof. Warr has served as principal of the local high school for two terms, finishing his second term this year. During his stay here, he has taken advantage of almost every opportunity possible to make improvements, not only at the school, but has spent much time during the summer months while school was not in progress to equip himself better for the carrying out of his duties as principal of the school. Prof. Warr spent the larger part of last summer studying at Columbia University, New York.

During the present school term he has brought about many improvements at the school of which he had charge, and has been largely responsible for the beautification of the school grounds during the past several months. Prof. Warr was able to secure for this present term of school, a faculty composed entirely of well trained teachers, each holding degrees from various colleges, and from all indications his services have been beyond question, and very satisfactory. It is with pleasure that the News makes the announcement that he will return again next year to serve as principal of our high school.

This change took effect last Monday, May 5th.

There also appears in the announcement from the laundry, a statement from the operators of the Clanton Service Laundry, asking their former customers to cooperate with the management of the Clanton Laundry & Cleaning Company, and that they hope their customers will see fit to patronize the latter. Ely McKee Killed In Accident Last Friday

Ely McKee, a local farmer, was killed last Friday afternoon when he was struck by an automobile in Cooper. According to the story given the News, McKee, who lives near Coopers, had been to a grist mill to some meal and was returning home about six o'clock that afternoon, when a car was driven by N. A. Marshall of near Birmingham struck the buggy, as the mule turned in front of the car. Both were going south at the time. The accident occurred almost directly in front of the Smith Garage in Coopers.

McKee was rushed to the Central Alabama Hospital here in a Martin ambulance, where it was found that he suffered a fractured skull, and never regaining consciousness, he died shortly afterwards. Marshall's car was only slightly damaged. He remained at the scene of the accident, and also reported to the sheriff here, and to the police, but no charge was placed against him, as it was stated by those who were eye-witnesses to the accident, that it was unavoidable. Marshall was accompanied by four others, none of whom were injured. He returned to Coopers Sunday from Birmingham to visit the family of the victim.

Funeral services were held for McKee last Saturday morning at Providence, with Rev. W. J. W. Jones, of Thorsby officiating. Martin of Clanton was in charge. Surviving is the widow, three children and several other relatives.

CLINIC FOR CRIPPLES HERE MAY 29

County Welfare Department Gives Report Of Last Clinic Here

The Alabama Society for Crippled Children, in its report of the last clinic held here, stated that within 50 miles of Clanton, there were 150 physically fit to work, and that 100 of these were actually covered by the society. Mr. Maddox stated, however, that of those were stretched by the volunteer fighters, who were hampered in their efforts by the extreme heat. Quite a bit of equipment was also caused by the burning and breaking of the high tension lines of the Alabama Power Company, which passed directly in front of the burning gin. Loud and bright explosions accompanied the break and fall of these lines, which furnished the towers of Jemison and Thorsby with electric current. These towers, as well as Clanton, were thrown into darkness for several hours. However power company employees had new lines stretched within a very short time after the fire.

The home occupied by E. D. White and family was badly damaged Wednesday night, of last week, when fire destroyed the roof and part of the interior, before firemen could get it under control. The alarm was given for this fire at about ten-thirty p. m., and the crew of volunteer firemen were soon on the scene and held the flames to the interior of the structure without much effort. The fire appeared to have originated at the rear of the house. A part of the furnishings were saved.

Jemison, Ala., May 8.—Jemison High School in a one-sided contest Tuesday evening, the score being 13 to 3. The home boys were hard hitters, counting mostly for the large score, Jemison got eleven hits while the visitors were able to gather only two.

Coach Green is to be congratulated on the fine spirit of his boys. Although defeated by the Jemison baseball and basket ball teams, everyone can not help from noticing the improvement in sportsmanship over that of last year. It is hoped that these schools can ever continue their friendly contest.

MADDOX GIN DESTROYED TUESDAY A.M.

Home Of E. D. White Badly Damaged By Fire Also Recently

Fire, the origin of which has not yet been determined, completely destroyed the old Maddox cotton gin, located on the Birmingham highway, early last Monday morning. The alarm was given at about one o'clock, but the gin had gained such headway that it was too late to have been visible something like fifteen miles.

The building, constructed on a two-story scale, had been built many years ago, and due to the dry weather soon was eaten up by the flames. Along with the building, there were two complete ginning outfits, with the exception of one press, that were destroyed, along with several large electric motors, according to Mr. J. A. Maddox, who owned the place. Mr. Maddox stated that the amount of damage to his property alone, would be between fifteen and twenty thousand dollars.

The home occupied by E. D. White and family was badly damaged Wednesday night, of last week, when fire destroyed the roof and part of the interior, before firemen could get it under control. The alarm was given for this fire at about ten-thirty p. m., and the crew of volunteer firemen were soon on the scene and held the flames to the interior of the structure without much effort. Lecroy Family Has Happy Reunion At Home Near Here

The Lecroy families and relatives met May 4th at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Alex Lecroy at Jonestown near Isabella to celebrate their fiftieth anniversary. The day was a very enjoyable one. All who could possibly come to this hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. Alex Lecroy were there to greet each other in hand shakes and loving words. Some of the relatives came from a far distance to be present at this particular gathering. Everyone was entertained by conversations with each other about happenings concerning all parties, both young and old.

A good dinner was served at noon. Eats of all kinds were distributed over the table making it a very attractive one. After everyone had enjoyed this meal Mr. T. L. Lecroy made a very interesting speech on the family's history. This was made by one who knows the incidents which have occurred within the family group. Similar talks were made by Mr. D. O. Manning, Mr. O. B. Belle, Mr. J. A. Carmichael, Mr. O. F. Davenport and others. A few more hours were spent together in the afternoon before bidding

A Monument To Alabama Products

This imposing structure, the home office of Alabama Power Company, located in Birmingham, is verily a monument to Alabama's natural resources. The principal materials used in the construction of this building, including structural steel, limestone, marble, brick, building tile, cast iron pipe, cement, steam radiators, lime and pine lumber, came from within sixty miles of the site on which the building stands, a feat that cannot be duplicated anywhere else in the world.

It has been pronounced by a London Daily newspaper as one of the three most beautiful public utility buildings in the world. It is a silent challenge to all Alabamians to buy Alabama materials whenever and wherever possible.

Tell How To Stop Pests Of Pecans

Auburn, Ala., May 8.—Diseases and insects are great enemies of the pecan tree. Hoping to enable farmers to reduce damage authorities at the Alabama Polytechnic Institute have made spraying recommendations.

Bordeaux mixture plus one pound of arsenate of lead and one-half pint of nicotine sulphate to 50 gallons of spray solution is recommended. The Bordeaux mixture is for diseases, the arsenate of lead for the fall webworm and other chewing insects, and the nicotine sulphate for aphids and other sucking insects.

To prepare Bordeaux mixture the authorities say dissolve four pounds of copper sulphate in 25 gallons of water in a wooden container and five pounds of lime in 25 gallons of water. Then pour these two solutions together, letting the streams mingle as they enter the new container. The arsenate of lead and nicotine sulphate should then be added. These recommendations are made by Prof. J. M. Robinson, Dr. C. L. Isbell, of the department of horticulture, and Dr. J. L. Seal of the school of agriculture.

Arrested for desertion and ordered to return to his wife, Charles Cerrin of New York asked that he be fined instead.

Arthur Coleman, 16, of Glencoe, Ill., and known as a "neighborhood terror," was sentenced to attend Sunday school for two years.

EDITORS ARE HUMAN

When a doubtful situation arises in a town it is quite the fashion to remark that "the paper ought to say something about that." The average citizen feels quite certain he could run a newspaper better than the editor does, and if he were publisher of that sheet he'd show 'em, you bet. As a matter of fact, if he has horse sense, he would do just as the editor does—put the soft pedal on family rows, church squabbles, scandals, not involving major principles, and such matters of minor importance as will adjust themselves with the passing of time. The newspaper critic ought not to expect the newspaper man to advocate or attack any proposition which he himself hasn't the courage to support or assail over his own signature. The editor is willing, even eager, to push any project in the public interest. But he is not willing to pull chestnuts out of the fire for individuals. — Haleyville Spotlight.

State Capitol News

Counties of Alabama are receiving road money from the proceeds of the two-cent gasoline tax of 1923 at the rate of fifty thousand dollars each per annum, according to figures recently released by the gasoline tax division of the State Tax Commission. This revenue, which is in the nature of a windfall to the various counties should, it is believed, be of material benefit to them in keeping up county roads.

Alabama has a gasoline tax of four cents per gallon, voted in two separate levies of two cents each. The proceeds of the second two-cent tax voted in 1927 goes to the State, for retiring the second road bond issue of $25,000,000, and for other road purposes. The 1923 tax of two cents, however, is divided equally among the 67 counties, with a provision that they shall use it in the maintenance and repair of roads and bridges. The amount which each county receives from this tax does not depend upon the size of the county or the amount it pays to the tax; Jefferson and Choctaw share alike, each county getting one sixty-seventh of the revenue. This revenue is steadily increasing as gasoline consumption mounts. During 1927, each county received from this source $44,220.69; 1928, $49,259.81; and 1929, $52,775.56. This makes a total of $146,256.06 which each county has received during the three-year period, or a grand total of $9,799,156.02 which has been divided among the 67 counties during the three years.

That the convict problem is still a problem is indicated by the protests voiced against employment of prison labor in various undertakings. For years the question of removal of convicts from under lease in the coal mines was an issue in Alabama, and was repeatedly promised, but never performed, until finally the present administration took them out. It has since developed that it is practically impossible to work the convicts anywhere without running afoul of some one. If the prisoners are employed in growing strawberries, the berry growers of the state object; let them turn to the production of cucumbers and the wrath of the cucumber growers is voiced against such competition; labor objected to employment of convicts in industry and not dispose of the question of what to do with the convicts. Someone has facetiously suggested that the question could be solved by discontinuing the working of convicts altogether, but it is believed that the establishment of the criminal population of the State as secured passage by Congress of an act prohibiting interstate shipment of convict-made goods; and in at least one county of Alabama objection has been voiced to working convicts on the roads, a delegation from that county contending that the work should be given to free labor in need of a job.

It is of course only natural for any and all classes of producers to object to being brought into competition with convict labor, but this objection does a privileged leisure class would probably bring on still more adverse comment from the taxpayers.

Incidentally, it is to be noted that the state's prison system provides means for consuming a far greater amount of cotton than is produced on state farms; the annual production of cotton on prison farms now being around 1,800 bales, while the consumption is 10,000 bales. The consumption has been largely increased in the last three years by employment of additional men in prison mills, increasing the hours of their operation.

Daily Basic Cleansing Helps Keep Your Skin In Good Condition

NOT LONG ago I received the following letter from a woman in Kansas:

"I am very puzzled about my skin. I ought to have a beautiful skin, for I eat plenty of fresh fruits and vegetables, and am outside most of the time. I live on a farm, and must get up very early in the morning—but I get more sleep than most women, for I go to bed early. Although I am only thirty-three, my skin is beginning to show fine little wrinkles, and seems to be growing darker and coarser all the time. I never have used anything but soap and water on my face, because I thought all I needed was to keep my skin clean. Please tell me what else I must do to have a good complexion."

This letter tells volumes about the skins of many women. In a way, the little lady from Kansas is right. By leading a healthful life and keeping your skin clean you can have a lovely complexion. But soap and water are only a part of the cleanliness story. If soap and water were all you need to keep your skin beautiful, creams and lotions never would have been invented. No, you must use more than soap and water. In those tiny pores of your skin, little oil glands are working all the time. When they work too hard, or the pores are relaxed, you have what is called an oily skin. When the oil glands do not work hard enough, or you dry out the skin with too much strong soap and water, you have a dry, parched skin. The secret lies in cleansing your face properly, and then giving your skin whatever special treatment it may need to function normally.

First, smooth cleansing cream over your neck and face with gentle upward movements of both hands. Then, after you have removed the cream with cleansing tissues you are ready for the next step. Since even the most perfect skin is full of microscopic depressions, the cleansing cream cannot remove every bit of oil and dirt from your skin. A freshening skin lotion will do this, so dampen small pads of cotton with skin lotion, and gently wipe them up over your face.

Perhaps you wonder whether you should stop using soap and water on your face. Certainly not, especially if your skin is oily, but be careful to use a soap that is mild and absolutely pure. After removing make-up and the day's accumulation of dirt from your skin with the basic cleansing I have just described, bathe your face gently with warm water and soap. This will leave your skin in perfect condition for whatever special treatment you may wish to use.

a Monument to Alabama's Matchless Resources

Alabama Power Building
Birmingham, Alabama

This structure—home of Alabama Power Company in Birmingham—is an imposing monument to Alabama's matchless resources.

All the principal materials in this imposing structure, rated as one of the three most beautiful utility buildings in the world, came from Alabama—with in a radius of sixty miles of the building site. Such required materials as were not made in Alabama, were bought thru firms maintaining sales offices in Alabama.

No other like area in the whole world could have provided the complete array of building materials used in this structure. Here are some of them, all made from Alabama's own natural resources:

Structural Steel, Limestone, Marble, Brick, Building Tile, Cast Iron Pipe, Cement, Steam Radiators, Lime and Pine Lumber.

For years, to come this building will exemplify the durability and beauty of the products of our state and stand as a silent challenge to all Alabamians to buy Alabama products and materials wherever possible.

Local Fire Fighting Equipment Is An Asset

The people of Clanton should congratulate themselves on having an efficient voluntary fire department, and every tax payer should extend to fire Chief M. F. Jones, Supt. of waterworks, Milton Smith, and every member of the department, congratulations, for the splendid and efficient work they did at the fire, when the home of E. D. White, was damaged a few nights ago and when the Maddox Gin burned last Tuesday morning. Chief Jones and his men responded to the alarms promptly and the work they did at the fires was highly commendable and done in an orderly and proper manner. Had it not been for the work of these men, especially at the Maddox Gin fire, there is no way to tell what damage, might have been the result. The fire fighting equipment fully paid for its cost at the Maddox Gin fire last Tuesday morning, and no doubt by this time, those who talked of cancelling the contract for the purchase of the engine and returning it have convinced themselves that it was right and proper for the town to have such equipment. Those who severely criticised the officials, who purchased the equipment, may have by this time concluded, that they were wrong in their criticisms. The fire engine, like the street and sidewalk pavement, twenty-five blocks of water mains and many other items, which might be mentioned stand out with much force, and depict unselfish service of those officials who labored to obtain them, than petty criticism of those who may have thought otherwise.

Is The Moral Life Of Clanton In A Balance?

In life, there are two paths to choose from. One, which is said to be extremely narrow and rugged, and the other, wide, smooth and easy going, paved with stones of pretense, shaded with trees of immorality, bearing the fruit of sin, with blossoms only showing at the beginning, while further down, the fruit is ripe and falling to the ground, causing a mush, a mire. The first path, with its narrowness and ruggedness, finally nearing the end, becomes paved with stones of purity, shaded with trees of eternal life, bearing the fruit of a life of happiness.

These two paths have a starting point in all parts of the world. Some of these points are more dense at places, while not so dense at other places, and narrowing it down to a smaller focus than the world, we will bring it down to Clanton.

Clanton is growing, there can be no doubt about that. And coupled with this growth, comes more of these starting points of the two paths. The people who make up our town have their choice of these two paths, and while the one which is wide and smooth at the beginning, may appear easier to take, still, some consideration should be given the other, with its narrowness and its ruggedness. In Clanton we have some of the finest built churches of any town this size, and it took money to build these structures of worship. It takes money to have a man of ability to occupy the pulpits of these churches, and it takes money to keep these churches attractive, as we wish them to be—and it takes money to follow the path that is wide and smooth at the beginning, but it does not take money for a person to start down the narrow and rugged path, which the further one goes, the more easy is the going.

Those taking the narrow path are thrown into a betwixt feeling of fellowship. There is no jealousy, no hatred existing between those who choose this path. Can it be that a feeling of fellowship exists between the people who choose the narrow path? The main starting point of the narrow path is through the doors of the churches, and from there, the taking that path leads to the narrow and rugged path, which the further one goes, the more easy is the going. There are two classes of people in Clanton, some of them are outside of the church, and with their money and influence, they are paving the way through the narrow path, and the other class, they are inside the church, and they are following the narrow path, and they are wondering why they are not getting through the narrow path. The people who are outside of the church, they are not blessed with, and that they need a helping hand, that has a clear path which leads to the narrow and rugged path. And then there is the younger generation of Clanton, they are being neglected, in someone's mad ambition for money, and power? Are those who would be reformers really taking the part of a reformer, setting an example before their inferiors, that will aid them to be better prepared for the journey down the narrow path?

These are a few questions that should be given some real consideration in Clanton, now with the moral life of our town probably hangs in a betwixt with immorality. If one who is capable of thinking, should give this some thought, bringing to mind the various occurrences that are spoken, but only in a practical way, practically every person in Clanton, it would perhaps throw some light on the inevitable downfall of the moral life of our town, unless some steps are taken to prevent it. And these steps should take these steps are the citizens of Clanton who put themselves up as having influence. Apparently this is not being done on a large scale. It is those who can see the downfall of the supposedly influential person, who are realizing the fact that they, themselves are having to take their own steps to protect themselves, and their families from following the path that ends in a mush, a mire of the fallen, rotten fruit from the trees of immorality.

"ROUND TOWN" ---by Doug

The first thing I am going to do this week is to compliment, praise, or anything in that line—our volunteer fire department. Those fellows certainly did some nice work at the fire down toward the high school last week. I think they have learned, that to put out a fire, you will have to get to where the fire is, and they really did that thing that night. After it was all over, it was found that the well-trained volunteer fighters had saved a part of the burning house, the well and the lot. Not bad.

I had an idea that my friend over on the right of this page, who goes by the name of "Jack" was going to catch it sooner or later, and I think he is beginning to catch it sooner and later. In comes a letter to the editor last week wanting to know something about the fellow's ancestors. And I wonder if he really has any.

Again I wonder something. I wonder how many people have noticed the cleanliness of the streets of our town, every Sunday morning. Yes, they are washed off every Saturday night. But we have some merchants here who forget, or just don't care, about the appearance of the sidewalks in front of their stores. I passed some very unsightly places in town Sunday morning, and thought once I would name them. If the merchants would just have the sidewalks swept off before closing time, the trash would be washed off late Saturday night. You couldn't expect those fellows to wash off your part of the walk, so why not do your part, which is very small?

The first thing I did Sunday morning was to walk down to the old location of the post office to get my mail, before I thought the place had moved. But sticking around for a few minutes showed me I was not the only one who forgot that thing. Or maybe, it is just a habit that caused so many people to go to the old place instead of the new. And don't you like the new fixtures in the post office now? They are really swell. Now is a good chance for some one to put up an independent office in the old stand. The old equipment is still there.

Somebody is sure going to get a swell set-up soon. The Young Men's Class of the local Baptist church has entered into a keen contest for attendance. Can't say which one of the two groups will have to give the fish fry for the other, but Sunday will tell the tale.

And now comes fires and bigger fires in Clanton. Our volunteer fire department did some stepping-on-it Monday night at the Maddox gin fire. I can't say that they all kept their head calm at this fire, judging from their actions while connecting the hose up. And I am most certain they were not cool, because I think many of them left the fire with blistered faces, but, taking it all in all, I suppose the boys did do pretty good and are getting some real experience in fire fighting round town. First, two weeks ago, it was a small blaze, next last week it was a larger fire, and then Monday night brought them face to face with a good-size blaze, and a hot one at that.

And truly, some very amusing sights can be seen, if one would take the trouble to look around at these fires in Clanton. Naturally almost everyone in town is there, and should be in the wee hours, then the sights are more amusing. There are countenances of young ladies, flaming with the reflection of the fire, for the lack of the certain amount of make-up. And too, that effect the moonlight has on a charming young lady, is sans. But one of the funniest sights Monday night, was Macey Jones, our fire chief, walking around with his shirt out, and I saw something which caused me to think more of Charles Moore.

Heard John Burton Higgins trying to sell Red Sherrod a coffin and a cemetery lot, the other day, and for a while I was beginning to believe that the deal would be closed. Then Red seemed to think how long he would live, so the deal was off. John Burton may be able to fix some one up with one of his repossessed coffins, if he has any, and he did state that one wished a later model, and wanted to trade in, he could perhaps fix that up too.

And then along comes Justice of the Peace T. W. Bryan. I think he has about decided to place reduced prices on marriages performed by him on Saturday afternoon.

It has been said that when the great Creator had finished his work of making all the good things. He found there was still some dirty work to do. So He made the reptiles, beasts, and the poisonous insects; and when He had finished this job, He still had some old scraps left on hand that were too bad to put into the rattlesnake, the hyena, the scorpion, and the skunk, so He gathered all these together, covered them with suspicion, wrapped it with jealousy, marked it with a yellow streak, and called it a KNOCKER. This outcome was so fearful that He had to make something to counteract it. So, He took a sunbeam, put it into the heart of a child, took the brain of a man, wrapped it in civic pride, covered it with brotherly love, made it a believer in equality and justice, a worker for and a supporter of every good thing in the community, and then called that product a BOOSTER. And henceforth mortal man has had the privilege of choosing his associates.

And which thought cause me to remember that old saying that "A man is judged by the company he keeps." And nowadays it is so hard to tell just who is what, bringing to mind also that "You can not tell the depth of a well by the length of the handle on the pump. Just about the time you are beginning to think well of some fellow, he ups and does something that causes himself to furnish gossip for the town! It's just too bad, then, cause these gossips can ruin or make a fellow, in Clanton, and you sure had better make their gossip sound good to others.

WHAT ABOUT 'JACK'S' ANCESTRY?

Jack is the son of a well bred mule, the property of the Editor of one of Alabama's leading weekly newspapers located at Alexander City, Alabama, who by virtue of his untiring efforts in behalf of the Democratic Party is justly entitled to be elected to the office of his choice, in the party and who should by all means be initiated into the 'yellow dog society of the Alabama Press Association' at its forthcoming meeting.

Jack came into our possession during October, 1928; some six weeks after he had strayed off over into Chilton County and as the great majority of the people here were then riding elephants, Jack could not find a home and one day he was frightened almost to death by a bunch of Hoovercrats riding elephants, and ran into the News office, where he has since remained and received as good treatment as could be afforded under Hoover prosperity. So, therefore to clear up the "DARRAIGN" we say "DAMNUM ABSQUE INJURIA ESSE PROTEST".

Do you know which machine it is that has caused the hard times, banks busting and the bottom falling out of the stock market? Is it the political machine you have reference to, my boy? or is it this:

O, thriftlessness of dream and guess! O, wisdom which is foolishness! Why idly seek outward things The answer inward silence brings?

Do you know who can direct when all pretend to know? Answer: Nobody.

Isn't this good? "Though the people support the government, the government should not support the people."

What do you think of John Locke's statement which is as follows: "Freedom of men under government is to have a standing rule to live by, common to everyone of that society, and made by the legislative power vested in it; a liberty to follow my own will in all things, when the rule prescribes not, and not to be subject to the inconsistent, uncertain, unknown, arbitrary will of another man."

MRS. ROBERT N. GOLSON HONORED IN BILLINGSLEY

Billingsley, Ala., May 7.—(Special) Mrs. Arnie Powell and Miss Thelma Baxter beautifully entertained at an afternoon tea Wednesday April 30th, 1930, in honor of Mrs. Robert N. Golson, a recent bride. The home was decorated with a profusion of Shasta daisies and ferns carrying out the bridal colors of green and white. After an enjoyable period of games and other amusements, Miss Thelma Baxter entered dressed as an old black mammy, carrying a huge clothes basket filled with gifts for the bride, much to Mrs. Golson's surprise. Miss Baxter paused in front of her saying, "Laws me, honey, you shore did give me a big washing dis time, my basket would hardly hold all dem clothes."

After the gifts were unwrapped and admired by all a delicious ice course was served. Then each guest was provided with cards and pencils and was asked to write advice for the bride concerning her married life. This was done in the form of an acrostic forming the name of Golson. These were read by the bride aloud, causing much merriment by the witty advice given.

The many, many gifts received by the bride testified to the love and esteem that this popular young woman is held in her home town. She is prominent in all church activities, taking part in Sunday school, B. Y. P. U., and Y. W. A.

Mr. and Mrs. Golson have just returned from an extended tour of Kentucky and Tennessee, and also visited the Magnolia Gardens. Mrs. Golson was, before her marriage, Miss Lucile Dickinson, the youngest daughter of Mrs. Hattie E. Dickinson of Billingsley. She finished high school at Prattville in 1929, and attended the Teacher's College at Florence. Mr. and Mrs. Golson are at home with Mr. Golson's parents, Dr. and Mrs. M. R. Golson, of Prattville, Ala.

Plans For Four Big Annual Regional Shows Announced For 1930

The four regions and the fairs at which the Special Jersey Shows will be held

New York, May 8.—The showing of fine dairy cattle during the 1930 show season should be greatly stimulated by the special program announced by the American Jersey Cattle Club. This program calls for four great Regional Jersey shows to be held in four divisions of the United States. Special premiums and awards have been provided to insure success of each of these shows. The purpose of these regional shows is to bring together exhibitors from the great dairy herds in the country so that breeders and dairymen may have the opportunity of seeing the most outstanding animals of the breed at some convenient point in each territory without traveling too great a distance.

In 1929 four regional shows were held for the first time and these shows met with remarkable success in each case. In quality and numbers of cattle shown these exhibitions excelled anything of this sort held in the past. New locations for the 1930 regional shows have been selected in accordance with the policy of holding these shows in conjunction with different fairs that have suitable equipment and are aggressively aiding the development of dairy cattle exhibits.

The four Regional Shows this year will be held in conjunction with the Pacific Slope Dairy Exposition, the Minnesota State Fair, The Texas State Fair and the New York State Fair.

The Pacific Slope Dairy Exposition or the Western Regional Show will be held at Oakland, California, November 8th to 15th. The states comprising the region being California, Washington, Montana, Oregon, Wyoming, Idaho, Nevada, Utah, Colorado, Arizona, and New Mexico. J. P. Eves, Judge.

Twelve states comprise the Middle West Regional Show to be held at the Minnesota State Fair at Minneapolis, August 30th to September 6th: They are Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, Missouri, Iowa, Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana and Michigan. George White, Judge.

The show for the Southern Regional area has been assigned to the Texas State Fair, Dallas, Texas, October 11th to 26th. This area comprises the states of Texas, Kentucky, Tennessee, Louisiana, Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi, Georgia, Florida, North Carolina, and South Carolina. J. B. Fitch, Judge.

The week of October 18th to 26th has been set aside as Jersey Week, so this Regional Show will not conflict in any way with Jersey Judging at the National Dairy Show, which will be held on October 14th and 15th.

New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware, Ohio, West Virginia, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New Hampshire, Vermont and Maine, comprise the Eastern Regional Show section, with the New York State Fair at Syracuse as the designated Regional Jersey Show, September 1st to 6th. W. W. Yapp, Judge.

The Regional Shows held before the National Dairy Show will contribute to the development of the Jersey exhibit at this great dairy cattle show, to be held in St. Louis, Mo., October 11th to 18th. It is expected that many Regional Show winners will compete at the National Dairy Show.

Thorsby Institute

The Junior Class entertained the Seniors on the lawn at the home of Miss Kathryn Foss last Saturday night. A number of new and amusing games were introduced by the entertainment committee and the time passed all too quickly. Strawberries, ice cream and cake composed the refreshments.

The library is rejoicing in the gift of a hundred and more books from M. Wallace Edler. All of them are popular fiction in good condition and there is variety enough to suit many tastes. Among the authors represented are Winston Churchill, Zane Grey, Rex Beach, Irving Bacheller, Oliver Curwood, Jack London, Owen Wister, Harold Bindloss, Mary Johnston, R. H. Davis, S. E. White, Booth Tarkington, and many others. The books will be ready for borrowers by the time this paper reaches its readers. The Institute and the public both owe Mr. Edler a vote of thanks.

The family of Rev. T. M. Bakke expect to leave next Sunday by auto for their new home in Freemont, Neb. We are sorry to lose them from our town, but our very best wishes go with them, nevertheless. Martin, the oldest son, who is a junior in Thorsby Institute, will remain until the close of school.

Another family from the big city north of us has yielded to the attractions of our little village and taken up residence here. Mr. H. N. Adams has moved his family into the house which has been Mr. Sam Goddard's home for many years. The Goddards have moved onto a farm.

The four classes are running a race this week to see which one can collect the largest amount of money toward the purchase of a set of the new Encyclopedia Britannica. The set will cost $129 and will be a great addition to the library. The class which wins the contest is to receive a pennant. When the students have started the 'hall rolling with a good big push they hope the alumni may visit to add considerably to its momentum.

The Boys South Cottage is shining with a fresh coat of paint which Garland Smith has just finished applying to the living room and kitchen.

SINGING AT MT. NEBO WAS DECIDED SUCCESS

The old-time singing at Mt. Nebo Saturday and Sunday was a decided success from all viewpoints.

Great crowds attended the convention, and the music was very inspiring. Dinners were rich and abundant. Many directors were present. The beautiful singing of Mrs. Culver was a noted feature of the convention.

Prof. Sanders, Prof. J. R. Scott, M. C. Jackson with their fine singing added much to the occasion.

Next session goes to Cedar Grove.

Rev. Hayes of Atlanta delivered an impressive sermon at eleven o'clock, Sunday.

JUDGE L. H. REYNOLDS GOES TO WASHINGTON

Judge L. H. Reynolds, left Clanton last Sunday morning for Washington, D. C., according to reports. The exact nature of his visit to the capital city could not be learned, however, it is probable that while there he made an effort to have his son, Grady Reynolds, re-appointed United States Attorney for the middle district of Alabama. Mr. Grady Reynolds was appointed to that office some several months ago, by the President, and when his appointment reached the United States Senate for confirmation, that body failed to confirm him, due to opposition which developed from the W. C. T. U. of Alabama, according to reports, and since then the matter of his re-appointment has been held up.

MOTHER'S DAY PROGRAM AT SARDIS CHURCH NEXT SUNDAY

We have been requested to announce this week that there will be a Mother's Day program at the Sardis church, near here on next Sunday, May 11th. The Mother's Day program is given at the Sardis church for the purpose of raising funds for the Baptist hospital at Selma, and the public is cordially invited to attend these services. A large donation is anticipated at this meeting for the hospital at Selma.

All members of the Sardis B. Y. P. U. are requested to be at conference next Saturday for the purpose of re-organizing the Baptist Young Peoples Union at Sardis.

FAITHFUL WORKERS HAVE A JOLLY TIME ON PICNIC

Members of the Faithful Workers Sunday School Class of the Baptist church were treated to a most enjoyable all day outing last Tuesday when they motored to Upchurch's camp on the river.

During the past month, an attendance contest was in progress in the class, which was divided into two groups, one designated by a white button, while the others wore blue ones. Mrs. H. T. Pipes was captain of the Whites, while Mrs. J. W. Franklin was head of the Blues. The group wearing white buttons was defeated in the contest, and according to the agreement entertained the opposing group.

The members met at the church on Tuesday morning, and from there went to the camp, where various forms of entertainm. it were enjoyed, and at the noon hour a bountiful and well prepared picnic lunch was spread. Following the lunch, Mrs. S. J. Ezell put on a banana eating contest, with a beautiful cake as the prize. The contestants were blindfolded and given a banana which they were to feed to another person who was also blindfolded. Much fun was derived from this sport, and at the finish Mrs. T. Pipes and Miss Lizzie Benaugh won out. They drew for the prize and Mrs. Pipes was victor.

Natural Gas Company To Make Extensions

An appropriation of $15,000,000 for extensions to the existing transmission system of the Southern Natural Gas Corporation and associated companies to be executed as rapidly as possible, and to be fully expended by October, was announced Wednesday by J. H. White, president of the company.

The expenditure will include the cost of sending natural gas through additional pipe lines to Montgomery, Mobile, Opelika, Auburn, Brick Yard, and Selma, Alabama, and to Macon, Milledgeville, Griffin, in Georgia; Meridian, Jackson, Laurel, Hattiesburg, Moss Point and Pascagoula, in Mississippi. In projecting its lines to Selma, Montgomery, Auburn, in Alabama; Macon and Griffin, Ga.; Jackson, Meridian, Miss., and south to Mobile and Pascagoula, it is not improbable that the Southern Natural Gas Corporation, through its associated companies, will cause surveys to be made of other points not at this time in the list of plants to be built, and expand further its distribution systems into points having no gas service at this time.

The expenditure authorized will bring the total investment of the Southern Natural Gas Corporation and associated companies up to $40,000,000 in the three states through which the system has a transmission system. The new work will result in the construction of about 800 miles of additional transmission line and will give the Southern and its associated companies a total system exceeding 1,700 miles, which will serve an estimated population of 1,300,000 persons.

The official announcement of Mr. White, president of the Southern Natural Gas Corporation, the Alabama Natural Gas Corporation, the Mississippi Natural Gas Corporation and the Georgia Natural Gas Corporation follows:

"Southern Natural Gas Corporation and affiliated companies, Mississippi Natural Gas Corporation, Georgia Natural Gas Corporation and Alabama Natural Gas Corporation, announce that plans have been completed for the extension of the natural gas pipe line systems and distributing systems in the southeast, involving an expenditure of more than $15,000,000.

"The additional communities to be served with natural gas are Meridian, Jackson, Laurel, Hattiesburg, Moss Point and Pascagoula, Miss.; Selma, Montgomery, Mobile, Opelika, Auburn, and Brick Yard, Ala.; Macon, Griffin, and Milledgeville, Ga., and many other towns contiguous to the pipe line system of Southern Natural Gas Corporation. The plans involve the construction of nearly eight hundred miles of additional pipe lines.

"The expenditure of the $15,000,000 will be distributed among the states of Mississippi, Alabama and Georgia about as follows: Mississippi, $7,500,000; Alabama, $4,500,000; Georgia, $3,000,000. The materials required in this construction will, in line with the established policy of these companies, be purchased locally wherever possible, and the labor to be employed will be procured largely in the vicinity of the work as it progresses.

"Southern Natural Gas Corporation has contracts with the local gas distribution companies to supply to them all the gas required for both domestic and industrial purposes in Jackson and Hattiesburg, Miss.; Selma, Montgomery and Mobile, Ala., and Macon and Griffin, Ga. . . ."

IN MEMORY OF MRS.

W. T. JOHNSON

The subject of this sketch died on March 27th at Birmingham, where they had been living since the first of the year. Her health had not been good for several years. Her remains were carried to LaFayette, Ala., where she and Mr. Johnson grew to womanhood and manhood, and have a host of relatives.

Mrs. Johnson was a member of the Verbena Baptist church in which community they had lived for about 20 years, and had raised a family, two boys and three girls. She was a regular attendant at her church as long as her health would permit. A kind and loving wife and mother, which was reflected by the devotion of a husband and children. She was related to some of the best families of Chambers County.

She was cheerful and hopeful to the last, uncomplaining, but submissive to the Divine will.

A goodly number of friends who read both county papers will learn with a feeling of regret of her death.

Australian Forester Visits In Alabama

Mr. A. D. Lindsay, a research official of the Australian federal forestry bureau, arrived at Montgomery May 2 to spend some time in the state inspecting the work of the Alabama Commission of Forestry with particular reference to the growing of southern pines. On the first day of his visit Mr. Lindsay viewed a considerable part of the state from the air in the plane assigned to the Commission of Forestry. He will visit the State Forest Nursery during the period of his stay.

SIDEDRESS COTTON, CORN FOR PROFITABLE YIELDS

There has seldom been years when it was more urgent for farmers to produce their money crops at a small cost per unit than this year. Prospects for relatively cheap cotton this fall face us on every turn. Having the knowledge of these facts makes it imperative that every farmer put forth all his efforts to produce his cotton and corn as cheaply as possible.

Since the planting season is over and farmers have used such fertilizers as they had at planting time the only chance now for them to make sure of low cost cotton and corn is to make liberal use of side applications of nitrate of soda.

Last year in Alabama 55 five-acre cotton demonstrations were conducted in as many counties, using three-fourths of the Chilean Nitrate as a sidedressing. The average increase for the soda used on these demonstrations was 488 pounds of seed cotton per acre. In addition to these demonstrations twenty-three one-acre demonstrations were conducted where 200 pounds of Chilean Nitrate of Soda was used as a sidedressing in addition to the mixed fertilizer the farmer used at planting time. The average increase on these demonstrations was 282 pounds of seed cotton per acre.

Forty-eight corn demonstrations were conducted in as many counties where 200 pounds of Chilean Nitrate was used as a sidedressing 35 to 40 days after planting. The average increase due to the soda on these demonstrations was 17 bushels per acre. This increase was produced at a cost of 29.4 cents per bushel for the soda.

From the above data on sidedressing cotton one can reasonably be assured that he can sidedress cotton at a cost of around 2 cents per pound for his increase. This cost, therefore, is sufficiently low to assure him a good profit on his investment for sidedressing.

The Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary Located At Fort Worth, Texas

By Rev. Arthur DeLoach

I know of very few men who have a more humble spirit than our president, Mr. L. G. Paign, who many of you know, for he was for a time, pastor of Samaria Baptist Church, told me this incident some time ago. He said he was standing near the door of Fort Worth Hall on a rainy day. As he started to put on his coat Dr. Scarborough walked up and said, "Let me hold your coat, son." Mr. Paign explains that he hasn't yet quite recovered from the shock. Oh! yes, that was just a small thing, but many things of that kind of which Dr. Scarborough thinks so little make him great to us because we believe he does it in the humility of Jesus. One of the most impressive stories concerning our President's humility was told by him when he had returned from a trip, when he told how he had won an elevator boy to Christ. Then after telling the story he asked, "Is the winning of a negro boy to Christ below the dignity of a Seminary President? No!" As long as we have a president like that there is no danger of the students losing the touch and interest for the common people nor even the interest of other races.

I do not know of a Baptist worker in the South that has a heavier load than has Dr. Scarborough. The gifts for missions have fallen off all over the South which means that a present we are getting less than half the amount necessary to run the institution. How Dr. Scarborough has been able to pay bills up until now is a mystery to me. I do not mean to sound a pessimistic note, but we do need to know facts. Of course, if our churches in the Southern Baptist Convention do not rally to the support of all our causes it will mean that some of the work here, that is so important, will have to be discontinued.

Of course you would like to know something of the student life of the institution. We arrived here just at the beginning of the cold wave in January. With snow, ice and sleet all over the ground and the wind blowing at a terrific speed we were ushered into Fort Worth Hall. That night many fine students came around to our room and gave us a royal welcome. Then I said in my heart. The old spirit of Southern hospitality hasn't died out yet. Yes, it was the real spirit of Christian fellowship and love. There is no interest where there is no friendship, there is no sympathy, there is no love that will compare with the love of a child of God for a brother in His Kingdom.

By no means are all the students here preachers, we have boys and girls training for missionary work, religious educational work, music directors, and other types of religious work. It is a great pleasure to be acquainted with many returned missionaries from all over the world. Most of them are doing some extra work while at home on furloughs.

It has been my pleasure while here to attend the county and city jails and to help hold religious services for the prisoners. Also there is a Gospel Mission where our students hold services Friday, Saturday and Sunday nights. Many of the students are doing a wonderful work in the Mexican districts of the city also. Besides this type of work many of the students are working in the churches of Fort Worth and suburbs. Then most of the preachers have fourth time, half time or full time churches somewhere in the West. So all the students have some kind of practical work to do. When a student leaves here he is not going out to do work upon theory, but on practical experience.

The Southwestern Seminary is the center of Baptist religious life for Texas and its influence reaches out to all the world. Dr. Scarborough is president of the Texas Baptist Convention and most of the board meetings, conferences, and such like are held here at the Seminary. One of the most interesting so far, was the Bible Study Week when Dr. M. E. Dodd, of Shreveport, was the principal speaker. Having been here only since January I have had the privilege of hearing many of the leading Baptists of the South.

It might be of interest to you to know that there are students here from all over the South. A number from the North and occasionally a few from foreign countries. Alabama has now sixteen students here.

Of course, I have told you only a few things about the Seminary, if there are questions that my friends would like to have answered concerning the Seminary I will be glad to give any information, I can through the papers of your county. Or personally if desired.

PREACHERS TO RETURN HOME AFTER SCHOOLING

By Rev. A. C. Nelson, Pastor of East-View Church
Nashville, Tenn., May 2.—School's out! And 365 country preachers are leaving their temporary schoolroom for the pulpit again, ready to give 365 country communities the benefit of their pastor's two weeks in school.
For the fourth consecutive year, the Vanderbilt Rural Church School here has held "commencement" exercises for its pastoral pupils, who journeyed this year from 24 states, and left pulpits of 28 denominations, to learn how to be better rural ministers.

Two weeks ago on April 21, several hundred individuals of separate faiths arrived on the campus of Vanderbilt University, to find out how to fulfill better their various obligations to the communities in which they lived; and at noon today, these same men, amalgamated into a student body unit, with a real "school spirit," packed up their books, accepted their certificates, received their honors, and entrained for home, all hoping to come again next year.

During the course of the school, students have not only studied new methods of filling pastorates from experts in every phase of rural life and activity; but twice daily they have heard lectures by leaders in every walk of religious, industrial, social, business, and rural life, and their class notebooks are full of interesting things to be passed on to their church members.

Dean O. E. Brown, of the Vanderbilt School of Religion, one of the organizers of the first rural church project and leading light of the present school, presided at closing exercises, made a farewell talk to his preacher-students, and expressed the hope that their two weeks' of study and inspiration here might mean some improvement in their own community life at home.

So, in 365 rural communities, those who sit in the pews each Sunday are getting ready for a gala service next week, when their preacher comes home. The sexton is wiping off the pulpit Bible, and dusting the pews—even those in the back that are usually empty.

The song is ended—but the melody lingers on.

THE CHILD'S BILL OF RIGHTS
(By Dr. Christmas Seal)

President Hoover is not only President of the United States, but is also President of the American Child Health Association. May 1st was observed as National Child Health Day. Dr. Christmas Seal believes every day should be Child Health Day and that parents should give special attention to the health of their children, because upon the foundation of health as it is built in the early years, will depend the structure of health in later years.

If parents will strive to attain that ideal as proclaimed by President Hoover in his Child's Bill of Rights, much will be done to make for a greater and stronger race. We commend the following as your goal:

"The ideal to which we should strive is that there shall be no child in America

That has not been born under proper conditions

That does not live in hygienic surroundings

That ever suffers from undernourishment

That does not have prompt and efficient medical attention and inspection

That does not receive primary instruction in the elements of hygiene and good health

That has not the complete birthright of a sound mind in a sound body

That has not the encouragement to express in fullest measure the spirit within, which is the final endowment of every human being."

A mess of greens is good medicine, not only in the spring months, but whenever attainable.

Favorite Recipes of a Famous Chef

as Told to Anne Baker
By LOUIS DIAT, Chef,
The Ritz Carlton, New York

Recipes for soups and salads are always welcome in the kitchen where the problem of avoiding an appetite-killing sameness in the menu often becomes a complex one. Mr. Diat offers the following two suggestions.

Louis Diat

Potage Fermiere—Chop together until medium fine four large carrots, one small turnip, two leeks, two onions and a small quarter of a medium sized cabbage. Brown all of these in three tablespoons of butter. Add three cups of white consommé, i.e., stock made from chicken or veal, and three cups of water in which white or lima beans have been cooked. Add pepper and one or two teaspoons of salt. Bring to a boil and cook slowly for at least one hour. The pot should be uncovered for at least the first half of the cooking. Just before serving add one-fourth cup of thin cream, one level teaspoon of sugar, and one-half cup of cooked white lima beans.

Marion Salad—For this select a very firm, crisp, good-sized head of lettuce. Level the stem so that it will stand level on the plate. Cut off a one-inch slice from the top. With a pair of kitchen shears cut out the inner leaves, leaving four or five layers. Wash in cold water. Turn upside down on a cloth to drain. Prepare small balls out of one-quarter pound of cream cheese and place in a mound in the lettuce shell. Pour Bar-le-Duc jam around the cheese balls. Sprinkle with from one to two tablespoons of sugar. Bathe some of the lettuce leaves which have been cut out in French dressing and pile lightly around the filled shell.

Saving penny by penny for twenty years, Andrew M. Kearen of Chicago finally accumulated enough to pay a $500 debt. He died the next day.

Mme. Josephine Beaulais of Paris was arrested for caning a woman she found kissing her husband, but was discharged.

FARMERS FIGHT LOW YIELDS WITH MUCH FERTILIZER

Alabama farmers have bought todate of May 3, 637,759 tons of fertilizer, according to figures released by W. B. Griffin, chief clerk of the department of agriculture at Montgomery. This year, therefore ranks third in tonnage of fertilizers, according to tag sales from the department.

"While the season is practically over with, the sale of a few thousand tons more is expected," said Mr. Griffin. It is not expected that the high record of 692,318 tons in 1928 can be surpassed. Neither the second high record of 675,350 tons made in 1929."

"When it is considered that farmers were not considered financially able to buy large amounts of fertilizers, this tonnage which is the third largest of record comes as a tribute to the skill and foresight of Alabama cotton producers."

"Farmers know full well that cotton cannot be produced unless fertilizer is applied heavily. Appearances indicate that a very heavy application per acre will be made on cotton this year. Only 4,600 tons were sold the past week, and it is known that but little more will be moved."

Farmers Set for Big Cotton Crop

Farmers have made all preparation for a good crop of cotton this year, in the opinion of Seth P. Storrs, commissioner of agriculture, who says that farmers will apply the third largest amount of fertilizer ever used in Alabama. The value of fertilizers used this year will average $100.00 per farmer. Farmers are now applying more fertilizer to less acres in accordance with the teachings of intensive farming.

Rain Hampers Early Crops

According to reports from Seth P. Storrs, Commissioner of Agriculture, the lack of rains has diminished the strawberry crop; also the Irish potato crop in the Gulf regions. There is yet time for rains to save a part of the north Alabama berry crop. Cotton is now in need of rain to hasten germination and insure a better stand. May is normally a dry month and unless rains come at an early date, the crop may suffer a setback.

They took part in the plays and games and then a swim in the pool. Most of all was a good dinner free to all.

Senior III Gift to C. C. H. S. Complete

The Senior III Memorial has been completed and no wistfuls as a silent reminder of the days spent in dear of Chilton County High School. The tablet bearing the inscription, "Chilton County High School; Class of 1930, is chiseled out of solid marble. This marble is white as snow without a blemish. Samuel Martin, and J. C. Maddox went over to Sylacauga to the marble factory, and personally saw that they were getting the real material. This tablet is now imbedded in the brick columns. The other classes are already discussing what they would like to present to their alma mater.

Three Interesting Visitors Here

We were very glad to have with us again, Miss Jessie Garrison, from the State Department of Education. She made a most splendid talk on "Making Yourself Necessary." "We become lopsided," the speaker said. "We need a well-rounded education," she emphasized.

Our other guest was Mr. A. C. Shelton, of Extension Department of Jacksonville, State Teachers College. He came in the interest of soliciting students to enter College there next September.

Our third guest of the school was Miss Robbie Sawyer, one of our former teachers but now connected with the First Baptist Church of Montgomery in some type of clerical work. We were all very glad to see Miss Sawyer, as evidenced by the entire student body.

ALA. HARNESS & SHOE SHOP HAS IMPROVEMENTS IN VIEW

In a conversation with Jesse E. Teel, proprietor of the Alabama Harness & Shoe Shop of this place, a representative of the News learned that within the next several days, the shoe repair shop will undergo some changes in the way of improvements. Mr. Teel stated that he had long felt the need for improvements in his shop, and intends to carry out his plans right away.

The Alabama Harness & Shoe Shop has secured the services of Jack York, who is said to be an experienced shoe repair man, having been engaged in that line of business for something like thirteen years in Gulfport, Miss., where he operated his own shop. Mr. York assumed his duties at the local shop last Tuesday, and appears to be turning out some nice work.

ISABELLA F. F. A. MET
LAST MONDAY NIGHT

The F. F. A. boys of the Isabella Chapter met Monday night of this week, and held their regular meeting. The meeting was called to order by Herman Lecroy, our vice president, then we had a general discussion by the boys and Mr. Thomas. We F. F. A. boys are planning on a tour this summer. We haven't fully decided where we are going, north or south. We want to be gone about a week on our educational trip. We are planning to see some things that will do us good in the future.

Next we listened to a good talk by Oliver Manning. His subject was "An Ideal Home and Wife." On next meeting time we have planned to listen to talks of Claude Conway, on "Why Plan Ahead?" Oswald Mims, "Why Preserve Our Natural Resources?" Arbury Williams, "What Good Is There in F. F. A.?" A. C. Veazey, "Modern Machinery, and Why?" These talks will be about ten minutes long. We are glad to see our two new members out to our meetings, Mr. R. C. Veazey and Mayfield Williams. These boys made a little talk at meeting. We are proud of them.

News From South Clanton

Editor News:

Well, South Clanton is still down here and growing bigger and better every day. I did think I would have some big garden lies to tell you by this time, but alas, "man proposes, but the dry, cold and windy weather has disposed in this instance." The place that knew the gardening effort is there, but where, oh, where are the succulent vegetables that we saw in our imagination? Ask of the winds.

I have understood that the location of the Veterans hospital is still undetermined. That is rather peculiar to me. We have right here a location that can not be surpassed anywhere in the State. It is high and dry, situated in a section in which sickness is almost unknown. No malaria at all and no stagnant water, even in the entire neighborhood, to breed mosquitoes or other obnoxious insects. The terrain is just undulating enough to break the monotony of a level area and render the view restful. As the seasons go by, almost every crop grown in the South can be seen on the large farm operated by Mr. Jasper Dennis and other adjacent experts in agriculture. Wells, deep or shallow, furnish any quantity of the purest and best free stone water you ever drank every day in the year. Fruit is also plentiful and easily obtained. Peaches, pears, apples, plums, strawberries, grapes, scuppermons, et cetera, can all be gathered in season "fresh from the vine" and enjoyed with all their natural luscious fragrance.

Besides, the transportation facilities are as perfect as could be desired. The great North and South paved highway passes right through the property, with at least a dozen buses per day going to and fro, giving access to any part of the United States, or Canada or Mexico, as you might desire. Then the trunk line of the L & N Railroad sweeps by in just a few steps of the location. As everyone knows, any amount of passengers or freight traffic is handled by them jam up to the station and right on the minute.

Oh! it would require a page of your interesting journal to tell you all of the paramount advantages this location offers, and when these various commodities get through their work and are ready to make an award, South Clanton, being, as it is, so near the center of population and also in the geographical center, and it having as many notable advantages to offer, looks like a sure winner.

So far as it looks to me now, if we are turned down, I am going always to wonder whether "high hat" influence and future political intrigue has a part in shaping that decision.

Have been sick this week and not able to stir out any, so news is kinder blank. However, I met a mighty fine old gentleman, Mr. T. S. Sanders, of Elmore, who is father to Mrs. T. Sanders. He visited her and her husband for several days and I found him quite interesting.

By the way, Mr. Deason, the clever ice man in your city, knows a good thing when he sees it, for he has moved his family down here in a lovely bungalow home right on the highway.

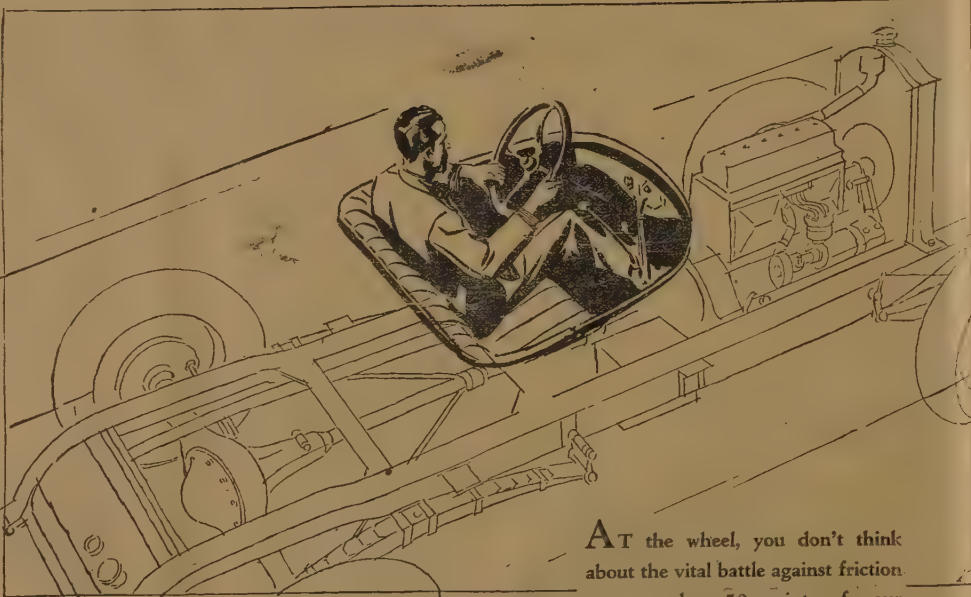

Mrs. Gentry left yesterday in her car for Elmore, where she will pick up her father and mother and continue the trip for several days through South Alabama visiting other relatives.

Mr. Duncan Wells is having extensive alterations made in his home here. When he gets it completed and paid for, I bet he will have to be shown the way home.

Mr. John Bailey and little daughter of Longview, were visitors here Saturday last.

These 2-Course Luncheons

By JOSEPHINE B. GIBSON
Director, Home Economics Dept.,
H. J. Heinz Company

THESE long winter months, with the children safely in school, offer an excellent opportunity for delightful entertaining. And instead of big dinners, or parties that tire you with preparations, it's much easier to serve only a few friends and pass the time in conversation and simple games.

The friends you entertain in this informal way do not expect a heavy meal, though naturally you will wish to serve something exceptionally good, and a bit out of the ordinary. The answer is a two-course meal. A substantial dish, such as a casserole of meat, fish, or cheese or vegetables; and then an appetizing fruit salad, with cake or plain cake for dessert. This is exactly the type of luncheon that any woman enjoys, and is served for any number of guests without inconvenience.

Here are the menus for two guests. When you see how simple they are to prepare and how delicious they are to have a "party" immediately!

Menu I
Baked Oysters—Mexican Style
Flapjacks
Sweet Pickle
Apple Butter Custard Pie
Coffee

Menu II
Chow Mein with Rice
Fresh Cucumber Relish
Pineapple, Prune and Marshmallow Salad

Cookies Coffee

Baked Oysters, Mexican Style—To 1/2 cup tomato ketchup add 1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce, 1/2 teaspoon salt, and a dash of pepper. Place one quart large oysters in a buttered casserole or baking dish, cover with the ketchup mixture, sprinkle with 1/2 cup grated American cheese, and dot over with 1 tablespoon butter. Bake in a moderate oven until the cheese is melted, and serve very hot with generous slices of sweet dill pickle.

Apple Butter Custard Pie—Line a pan with pie crust. Beat 2 eggs thoroughly, add 6 tablespoons sugar, and 1 cup apple butter. Then add 1 cup milk, mix thoroughly, and pour into the pan lined with crust. Bake in a moderate oven until the custard is firm.

Rice Flake Muffins—1 cup rice flakes, 1/2 teaspoon salt, 2 eggs, 1/2 cup brown sugar, 1/2 cup oil, 1/2 cup milk, 1 tablespoon melted butter.

Sift flour, salt, baking powder, and sugar. Add rice flakes, which have been crushed with rolling pin. Add milk to beaten egg, and mix into dry ingredients with a fork. Add melted butter and bake for fifteen minutes in moderate oven in well buttered muffin tins.

Vacation Motor Trips

Thousands are making their plans to "See America First" this summer by motor

This is the time of year when the whole family begins to look forward in eager anticipation to the summer vacation. Whether to go to the mountains, the seashore, the West, the lakes of Wisconsin, Canada, New England, or the many splendid resorts of the South.

The annual family argument over "where to go" has to a large extent been obviated by the automobile and America's splendid net-work of good roads. Many motorists solve the problem by making a round-trip, taking in the mountains, the seashore, some of the large metropolitan cities, and in this way pleasing all the family.

Since last summer hundreds of millions of dollars have been spent on the construction of new concrete and asphalt highways, making it possible for the motorist to vacation where he will, with the assurance of excellent roads.

No country has as many or varied resorts to serve as summer playgrounds for its people as has the United States, nor as excellent facilities for reaching them. The South itself has many excellent beaches along the Atlantic Seaboard and the Gulf Coast, beautiful mountain resorts in Western North Carolina, North Georgia, and many points of national interest in Kentucky.

For those who wish to take a longer and more extended motor trip, there is the beautiful Pacific Coast, the wonders of Yellowstone Park and the other National Parks of the Great West; the sapphire lakes of Canada, Wisconsin and Minnesota; New England with its beaches, mountains and many points of historical interest; New York with its myriad entertainments; Atlantic City, Niagara Falls and other points too numerous to mention.

Wherever you plan to motor, the Standard Oil Touring Service will be glad to route the trip for you, sending you maps and up-to-date information on the best roads, and shortest route to take. Through State Highway Departments and other reliable sources of information, the Standard Oil Touring Service secures weekly reports on road conditions throughout the country, so that its road information is accurate and up-to-date.

Address a card or letter to Standard Oil Touring Service, 426 W. Bloom St., Louisville, Kentucky, stating destination of trip you plan to make, and routing will be sent you at once. There is no charge for this service.

Troubles

"I HAVE used Black-Draught as a family medicine for a good many years," says Mrs. Sallie Laughrun, of Hunteville, N.C. "I have found it an excellent remedy for constipation and the troubles that follow it. I have suffered frequently from gas pains, and when I am bothered that way I begin at once to take Black-Draught. Relief follows quickly."

"I give Black-Draught to the children when they are constipated, and it is not long until they are running around again."

Thousands of others have reported good results from the use of this purely vegetable medicine. Insist on the genuine Thedford's

ALABAMA CHILDREN ATTEND SCHOOL FOR LONGER TERMS

A comparison of the length of Alabama school terms, during the past forty years at ten year intervals, shows a steady improvement. In 1888 the average term was 3 months; in 1898, 3.6 months; in 1908, 6.2 months; in 1918, 6.6 months, and in 1928, 7.9 months. The 1928 term was 163 per cent longer than the term of 1888. However, the minimum length of eight months, set as the goal for Alabama schools as early as 1913 by Dr. H. J. Willingham, who was then state superintendent of education, has never been attained.

Interpreted in terms of the present generation of school children, this gain in the length of the school year means that the boys and girls of today go to school more than twice as long as did their parents, provided they take advantage of the opportunity for schooling provided by the state. Back in 1898, when the parents of today were school boys and girls, the school term was 72.76 days, or 3.6 school months, as revealed by the report of State Superintendent John O. Turner. As stated above, the term for 1928 was 7.9 months.

Youth Becomes Insane
During Church Service

Mobile, Ala., May 4.—John Richardson, 21, of powerful build, was taken to the city hospital here today with cuts and bruises after he became suddenly demented while attending services at a city church.

The minister was preaching on "Dismantled" when Richardson suddenly stripped himself of all his clothing, proceeded to smash everything within reach, threw the congregation into a panic and left the church interior in a shambles.

Richardson used a chair and belabored all those about him, turned the church organ upside down, smashed it, broke several pews, tore down the pulpit and finally dove through a window. He was seriously injured in the dive. Six members of the congregation finally bound him with ropes and turned him over to a squad of police. The man was taken to a hospital for treatment.

MUMBLING OUR WORDS

Are Americans falling into the habit of mumbling their words? Trained public speakers, teachers, and many citizens who give particular attention to enunciation and pronunciation are easy to understand, but there are tens of thousands of people who popularize the word "what" by miss-speaking their words.

Plain speech is very important to telephoning, and a lot of people who get the wrong numbers might have better luck if they pronounced their words with as much force as they voice their complaints. Recent investigations of telephone conversations, in which 80,000 words were noted, showed that Appointment of Gen. W. F. Bare as general commercial manager of the Southern Bell Telephone Company with headquarters in Atlanta, and of T. Barton Baird, district manager, to succeed him as Alabama state manager was announced Monday.

Gen. Bare succeeds James E. Warren, who became vice president in place of Carroll O. Bickelhaupt, recently promoted to assistant vice president of the American Telephone & Telegraph Company in New York.

Gen. Bare has been a leader in Alabama military affairs. He began his telephone career as a lineman in 1903, attaining position of state manager in 1922. His military record began in 1916 as a major on the Mexican border. He became lieutenant colonel of the Fourth Alabama Infantry. He was made a colonel by Gen. Pershing in France after being wounded. He received two citations from Gen. Pershing and was decorated with the distinguished service medal by President Harding.

Baird came to Birmingham in 1923 to succeed Gen. Bare as district manager. He entered the telephone business 27 years ago, coming from New Orleans.

W. A. Steadman, district manager at Montgomery, succeeds Baird in Birmingham. He was formerly assistant district manager in Birmingham, where he is widely known.

T. E. Harris, suburban district manager in charge of telephone exchanges in North Alabama, succeeds Steadman at Montgomery. He has had a wide experience in Southern telephone circles.

Facts Of Cotton
Spacing Are Given

Auburn, Ala., May 8.—Results of experiments conducted by the agronomy department of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute show that there is very little difference in yield of cotton spaced from 12 to 24 inches in the drill with from two to four stalks to the hill and the rows three and one-half feet apart. Cotton spaced 12 inches apart in the drill with two plants to the hill in three and one-half foot rows produced 1037 pounds of seed cotton per acre while cotton spaced 24 inches in the drill with four plants to the hill in three and one-half foot rows produced 1039 pounds seed cotton per acre.

The Senior class of Isabella School, under the direction of Miss J. B. Warren, will present a play, "The Whirlwind," at the Isabella School, Monday evening, May 19th, at eight o'clock. It is a story of a girl completely captivated by her young guardian, Bob Matthews, who is played by Houston DeRamus, then see Myrtle Durbin as Betty Ann Stewart. If you doubt it, come and see him; if you don't, come anyway. The other characters are equally as good. The complete cast of characters follows:

Bob Matthews, an unwilling visitor at the Crossroads, Houston DeRamus. Charlie Lawrence, his go-getter friend, Oliver Manning. Spud McClackey, from Sunshine Alley, Claude Conaway. TATE COMPLETES SANITARY WORK IN CLANTON, ALA.

Guy M. Tate, of the State Health Department of Montgomery, has completed the sanitary work which he has been carrying on in Clanton for the past several weeks. Mr. Tate's duties were to make a survey of the police jurisdiction and nearby settlements of Clanton, and see that state approved privies were erected on premises where a person resided. In the city limits, residents were made to install sanitary sewer connections to their homes. Specifications for the privies were furnished by the state through Mr. Tate.

Mr. Tate expects to go to Jemison this week to begin his work there, and expects to complete it in time to start in Verbena with about a week and a half, he stated. He will also include Thorsby in his work during the next few weeks.

Several persons in Clanton who refused to build the privies will be hauled by the court, it was stated, and due to the fact that the State of Alabama has passed a law requiring the sanitary privies, it is advisable for all who are given notice, to take immediate steps to have them installed.

The disappearance of the famous explorer, Livingston, in darkest Africa, years ago, and his rescue by Stanley, forms one of the epic stories of modern times. The story of this serial, "The King of the Congo" has been booked by the Wadeson Theatre and will begin showing here at an early date, according to the management. This is said to be the first wild animal serial with sound, music and dialogue ever screened, and the people of Clanton may consider themselves fortunate in having the opportunity to see such a picture.

There are thrills galore in "The King of the Congo." Miss Jacqueline Logan and Walter Miller are the stars of this great picture. Others included in the cast are Richard Tucker, Boris Karloff, Larry Steers, Harry Todd, Richard Neill, Lyle McKee, and others who are well known.

The weird beating of African tom-toms, the chanting of native tribal songs and war-cry; the monotonous and searing undertone of mysterious African life pulses through this picture to be shown by the Wadeson. Watch for the announcement of the date when this big serial will begin.

Marion Smith, of Livingston was among the visitors to Clanton last Monday.

Harmon Headley and son of Clanton Route 7, were visitors to town last Monday. While in town they called at the News office.

S. M. Edwards Writes About Expenditures

Following we publish a letter to the News from Sam M. Edwards, candidate for member of the Commissioners Court of this county:

Thorsby, Ala., May 12, 1930.

Mr. Editor of News:

I have waited with keen interest to see the reply of The Union-Banner to your article in week before last issue of your paper regarding expenditures of Commissioners Court for the past five years. The editor of Banner must think there is dynamite in this article and prefers to leave it alone. $1010.86,95, this is really a staggering sum with so little a showing for it. More especially in the western part of the county. Mr. Tax Payer, get your pencil and let us figure a little. 1929 more than doubled 1927 in expenditure in public funds. Now subtract the road and gasoline funds from the above amount. You will find that you have $622,292.76 and I understand the above amount can only be used for road purposes. From the best information I (continued to back page)

CHILTON LEADS WITH BUREAU MEMBERSHIP

Ranked Second Until Last Week; District Composed Of 21 Counties

Miss Zora Guy, Assistant Secretary, Chilton County Farm Bureau, states that the Chilton County Farm Bureau now leads the twenty-one counties of this district in Farm Bureau membership. Chilton has been second place until last week when she took the lead over Randolph County by five members.

If you have not received your insurance policy, see Miss Guy at the Farm Bureau office and get your insurance card filled out so Chilton County can keep the lead on the other 20 counties of our district.

Miss Guy further states that there are many good farmers of the county who seem to appreciate the service the Farm Bureau office is trying to give in making it possible for the farmers to get poultry and dairy feeds, seeds, fertilizer, etc., as recommended by the Alabama Experiment Station, at wholesale prices, providing good markets for their chickens, cream and other farm products, and the numerous other services the Farm Bureau is trying to render Chilton County.

Drive Chevrolet From Buenos Aires New York

After triumphing over fever, bandits, adverse weather conditions and having blazed their own trail over thousands of miles of mountain jungle and desert country, two courageous Argentines, driving a Chevrolet touring car, arrived in New York recently—the first to pilot an automobile from Buenos Aires to the United States.

Adam Stoessel, 33, and his brother, Andrew, 23, left Buenos Aires in their Chevrolet April 19, 1928. Their arrival in this country a few weeks ago climaxed a two year battle, covering 19,000 miles, against terrific odds that had caused the failure of every expedition that had previously attempted the journey.

Enthusiastic welcomes greeted the daring South American pair in New York, Washington and Detroit. At the formal ending of their hazardous trip at the battery in New York, within view of the Statue of Liberty, they were warmly greeted by the Argentine Consul General, Alejandro Bollini and his staff.

Proceeding to the national capital, they were greeted by Vice President Curtis and leading figures in official Washington, including Dr. L. S. Rowe, director general of the Pan-American Union and Dr. Enciso, chargé d'affaires at the Argentine Embassy. Officials of the American Automobile Association and the National Chamber of Commerce also extended their congratulations.

At Detroit they were welcomed by W. S. Knudsen, president of the Chevrolet Motor Company, who presented them with a new Chevrolet. Commenting on the brilliant adventure, Mr. Knudsen pointed out that the Stoessel brothers had made an important contribution to the world-wide enjoyment of the automobile and had accomplished a very natural advance in bringing the three Americas into closer union.

"The sensational achievement of these boys adds a thrilling chapter to the romance of the automobile and indicates that the long-heralded Pan-America highway, linking the three Americas, has passed the dream stage and within the lifetime of many will be an accomplished reality," he said. In showing the car to Mr. Knudsen, the Stoessels were proud of the fact that despite the terrific punishment of 19,000 miles of adventurous driving, the Chevrolet was still in good condition, though its appearance gave mute testimony of the ordeal through which it passed.

Though naturally pleased with the success of their venture, both voyagers declared they would not attempt the expedition again under any circumstances. They speak Spanish and German but are unable to express themselves in English. Through an interpreter they described their trip in detail. Asked what was necessary to accomplish such a journey, they were reluctant to agree that it could be done again under similar circumstances, but compromised with the requirements of: A good automobile, plenty of money, and an unconquerable spirit.

Twenty-five thousand feet of motion picture film taken during the long jaunt served to bear out the thrilling account they gave of the journey. More than 6,600 gallons of gasoline and 43 tires were used during the run. No check was kept on oil consumption.

The trip took them through fourteen countries and made it necessary for them to conquer every type of road and weather condition experienced in automobile driving.

Though their parents and ten brothers and sisters discouraged the idea as too hazardous and too likely unsuccessful, the boys set out from Buenos Aires three weeks after determining on the venture. Having previously owned five Chevrolets at various times, the selection of a car was easy. They picked the open touring model as the best adapted to their needs. The holes at the intake of the carburetor were enlarged to make possible more efficient operation in very high altitudes. Extra tanks of gasoline, oil and water were taken on. A shovel, an axe and plenty of tow-rope were put aboard.

Then following a dinner given by the Automobile Club of Buenos Aires, which sponsored the tour, they set out on the adventure that was to add new laurels to the achievement of the automobile.

Surmounting seemingly unconquerable obstacles that beset them almost at every turn in South and Central America, they fought their way over rocky mountain passes, across arid deserts and through jungle thickets in many cases never before traversed by a wheeled vehicle. Except for an 80 mile stretch between Cartagena, Colombia and Colon, Panama, they covered the entire distance by automobile. The short boat trip was made necessary because of the impenetrable country between these two places. It is said that this territory has never been traversed by man or beast.

In view of the fact that they were moved to undertake the trip partially as a result of a desire to gain information that would be helpful in the future development of the Pan American highway and partially as a result of an adventurous desire to see the world, they made no effort to set a time record.

A total of 262 courses are included, 65 of which are new. The faculty will

Although Chevrolet dealers all the way from Buenos Aires to New York cooperated in providing whatever service was necessary, the trip was neither inspired nor sponsored by the Chevrolet Motor Company. The Stoessels started out on their own initiative with a fairly liberal supply of funds given them by their father. They were able to defray additional expenses by taking motion pictures and showing them in various cities where by agreement with the managements of theaters they divided admission receipts with the house.

The following log of the trip shows the progress made by the expedition and the countries through which they passed:

Nitrogen Potash Top Dresser

In demonstrations conducted during the past 2 years 74 Alabama farmers used approximately 3 times as much potash as they had been using to cotton. This extra potash was used in addition to the regular fertilizer application. The return was $4.06 for each $1.00 invested in extra potash. In most cases the extra potash was used as a top-dressing. Potash keeps down diseases, reduces shedding to a minimum and makes bigger bolls. Our nitrogen-potash top-dresser contains nitrogen and potash in the combination that has proven very profitable in Alabama.

Quick Delivery of Merchandise Helps Make Your Dollars Go Further

One of the major merchandising developments of the post-war period has been the increasing stress placed upon rapid turnover of goods. In practically every line of business today, stocks are being purchased in smaller amounts than was the case a decade ago. Result: more efficient distribution, larger profit per dollar of invested capital, and, in most trades, lower prices to the consumer.

But rapid turnover of merchandise is necessarily based upon prompt, dependable, and regular delivery of shipments. The stream of goods must pass from manufacturer to wholesaler, to dealer and public, swiftly and freely. Here the railroads of America have contributed much to modern business.

The fact that the railroads last year attained 99.99% efficiency in the delivery of freight cars to shippers, and moved freight at a higher speed than ever before, stands as a real tribute to modern management. They also made 11 other new records of efficiency.

Each year the railroads have responded to the Nation's growing transportation needs with huge investments in trackage, rolling stock, and in bettering the service. Yet, while the rest of the country has been benefited by the improved service, the railroads themselves have seen the return on their investments decline from 5.3% in 1926 to 4.9% in 1929—the year in which they handled more freight and rendered better service than in any previous year. The explanation lies in the growing burden of taxation, higher operating costs, and other conditions over which the railroads have no control.

State Capitol News

Barbour County has raised the money needed to organize a county child welfare unit, which will leave only one county in the state, Russell, without such a unit, according to information from the state child welfare department.

The last legislature largely increased the state appropriation for child welfare work, and tremendous progress along this line has resulted. Under the present administration, 52 of the 67 counties of Alabama have set up county child welfare organizations; at the beginning of the present regime there were only 14 organized counties, of which three, Jefferson, Montgomery and Mobile, had been organized under special local acts.

Road mileage completed in Alabama during the fiscal year ending September 30, 1929, comprised 986.71 miles of state projects, costing $8,794,526.86, and 374.08 miles of federal aid road, costing $3,664,022.64, or a total of 1,360.79 miles of highway at a cost of $12,459,129.50. These figures are from the annual report of the State Highway Department, copy of which has just been received from the printer. The mileage of State projects completed during the last fiscal year was divided as follows: 185.68 miles of graded and drained; 111.12 miles sand clay and topsoil; 336.48 miles gravel and chert; 32 miles bituminous surface treatment; 10 miles bituminous macadam; 24.96 miles rock asphalt; and 104.57 miles cement concrete. The federal aid projects completed consisted of 127.27 miles graded and drained, 14.34 miles sand clay and topsoil, 127.90 miles of gravel and chert; 18.60 miles bituminous concrete; and 62.05 miles cement concrete.

There was under construction October 1, 1929, at the beginning of the present fiscal year 710.92 miles of State projects, to cost $6,171,051.60 and 242.92 miles of federal aid projects, contract price of which was $2,805,809.16, or a total of 953.84 miles under construction to cost $8,976,860.76. State projects under construction embraced 228.37 miles of grading and draining; 201.70 miles of sand clay and topsoil; and 245.68 miles of cement concrete. Of the federal aid projects, 88.12 miles were grading and draining, 16.95 miles sand clay and topsoil, 33.39 miles gravel and chert, 17.20 miles surface treated line rock, 17.37 miles rock asphalt and 69.89 miles of cement concrete.

That Alabama is making progress toward the goal of a completed system of roads is shown by the fact that the total mileage of State highways built under the Graves administration will equal, and probably exceed, the total mileage of such highways in existence at the beginning of the present administration.

Hostilities between Alabama and Tennessee over trucks of one state crossing into another have been terminated, to the general satisfaction of business men on both sides of the border of the two states.

The trouble started when the attorney-general of Tennessee ruled that Alabama trucks making occasional trips into Tennessee must register and take out Tennessee license tags. A number of Alabamians were arrested under this ruling. Alabama authorities reciprocated and began dealing in like manner with visiting trucks from Tennessee. This action was dictated by the Alabama State law, which provides that this State shall extend the same courtesy to visiting motor vehicles as is extended to Alabama vehicles in the state from which the visitor comes. A rather tense situation developed along the northern border, with considerable feeling manifested on both sides. Chambers of commerce and business men of both states acted on behalf of a peaceful settlement, and Henry S. Long, Chairman of the Alabama State Tax Commission, started negotiations looking to a satisfactory settlement with the Commissioner of Finance and Taxation of Tennessee. The Attorney-General of Tennessee was induced to reverse his original ruling, and peace and harmony restored. Much of the credit for the solution is to be found in the Alabama law, which is regarded as eminently fair in that it provides for giving outsiders the same consideration which they accord to visiting Alabamians.

Progress in the fight against illiteracy in Alabama is shown by the fact that since October 1st of last year a total of 55 counties of the State have made requisition for aid from the State and the Rosenwald Fund appropriation to carry on the work. Figures on total enrollment in the schools for adult illiterates are not yet available, but

DON'T SUFFOCATE THE BABY

By Dr. Christmas Seal

A baby has a tough time getting thru the first year of life. It is quite a perilous year and the love and care of parents are not helpful factors unless intelligently directed. Just for example, what would you think of a mother putting such heavy covers on a baby as to suffocate the child? Eleven babies were so done to death in one state not nearly so large as Alabama, last year, nine others were accidentally suffocated while sleeping with parents. This used to be a very common thing in generations ago when drunkenness was common and nobody knew any better than to have the baby sleep in the same bed with father and mother. But there is no more excuse for it in this day and age than to allow the family cat to curl up on baby's face and choke her—another "accident" that is all too common. Dr. Christmas Seal suggests that every mother of a young baby be visited by the county nurse and instructed what not to do.

partial reports show an enrollment of 8,193, of which 1,534 were white and 6,662 colored. Jefferson County headed the list with an enrollment of 2,946; Dallas was second with 630, and Baldwin third with an enrollment of 584, reported to date. Other counties ranking high in the list included: Tallapoosa, 575; Etowah, 448; Pike, 388, and Crenshaw, 382.

A comparison of the length of Alabama school terms, during the past forty years at ten year intervals, shows a steady improvement. In 1888 the average term was 3 months; in 1898, 3.6 months; in 1908, 6.2 months; in 1918, 6.6 months, and in 1928, 7.9 months. The 1928 term was 163 per cent longer than the term of 1888.

Interpreted in terms of the present generation of school children, this gain in the length of the school year means that the boys and girls of today go to school more than twice as long as did their parents, provided they take advantage of the opportunity for schooling provided by the State. Back in 1898, when the parents of today were school boys and girls, the school term was 72.76 days, or 3.6 school months, as revealed by the report of State Superintendent John O. Turner. As stated above, the term for 1928 was 7.9 months.

Stop The Danger Ahead Of Our Government

It has been said, by very good authority, that the greatest danger ahead for our government is the lack of interest of the people in it; which prompts us to frankly caution the citizens of this county about conditions affecting our governmental affairs, here at home. We should have certain defined issues in political campaigns and the voters should take an active part in the study of these issues, so that all citizens might be informed as to what is best for their government. If this is done prejudice and personal envy will be brushed aside in campaigns and the political smoke screen will not be permitted to cover up the real issues or hide them from the voters. The adroit, cunning, deceitful and false leaders, who advance prejudice, hatred and falsehoods as a means to get into office, will find it hard sailing to meet a people who have informed themselves as regards the true conditions of their public affairs. If the people will listen to sound reasoning instead of prejudice, then we may hope to begin a new era, in this county. We must, of course, have political parties to select those who will and can best govern, and it is necessary that every citizen become a member of a political party which he or she finds, after mature and careful study, will advocate issues designed to bring to the greatest number of people, sound accomplishments, and whose candidates are composed of men and women who are morally fit for public servants, and whose lives are morally clean, and whose characters are exemplary, and the citizens may point to as public officers without blushing.

The interest of a citizen in his or her political party according to our way of reasoning would prompt him or her to pay their own poll tax and be absolutely free from any obligation to any candidate of that party, and from the party as well, in the event that it ceases to function in the true sense of a political party. If the citizens in our government reach the point where facts are looked to as a criterion to judge conditions and they are bona fide in their efforts to accomplish the very best results through their governmental agencies, then those who look forward to each political campaign with hope for the monetary rewards they will receive therefrom will find themselves highly disappointed when the campaign arrives and the candidate who goes out to corrupt the electorate under the guise of hiring those with influence to go about the territory where they wield their influence will find himself facing embarrassing conditions, because those men and women who have built for themselves characters, with influence among their fellows, will spurn their offers and help to defeat that candidate.

When we reach the point where our interest in public affairs is focused entirely on the idea of how we may do the most and render to the entire citizenship the best service, rather than upon some one individual or individuals who make it a profession to hold public office at the expense of the tax payers, then we may reasonably expect to see our schools run full time, our roads paved under the management of competent men and all public property handled and cared for, as prudent individuals handle their own property and affairs. That talk, that good men and women should not get into politics; that the preachers should not take a hand in public matters and use their influence to stamp out the dirty-diabolical-treachery of the slimy politician, is whole cloth bunkum, and when you hear one of those who put forth that argument, you may not go wrong if you mark him as a recipient of the spoils of the ring. He is either directly or indirectly benefitted, by trade, protection or receives things of intrinsic value for his services and he usually throws in his influences for good measure. The remedy lies within the power of the men and women of this county who believe in upholding that which is right and clean. The common people who labor for their livelihoods will have to demand that the Grand Jury investigate and stop the purchasing of public office and corrupting of the electorate.

Mr. Citizen, what do you think of the idea of candidates paying poll tax for men and women? Do you believe that the candidate does so with the idea that the voter will vote against him?

The Old Time Village

The automobile, the movies, and other factors in American life, has completely changed the style of the American village just as it has revolutionized our cities. Mark Sullivan, well-known Washington correspondent, writes that "the old-time American village in the literal sense is no more to be re-created than the snows of yester-year. Whoever in future years wishes to look upon one will need to travel to Dearborn, Michigan, and will have to thank Henry Ford, who has had the happy inspiration to set up, in a museum sense, a genuine old-time village in the form that was familiar at the time of Ford's boyhood."

Farm Wages, April First Lowest Since 1923.

Farm wages on April 1, of this year, reached the lowest figure since 1923, according to the Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the Department of Agriculture. Wages per month with board ranged from $23.50 in the South Atlantic States to $53.99 in the Far Western States. Monthly wages without board ranged from $33.88 in the South Atlantic States to -77.27 in the Far Western States. Daily wages with board, $1.20 in South Atlantic States; $2.55 in North Atlantic States; without board, $1.57 in South Atlantic States; $3.88 in North Atlantic States. "The situation," says the Bureau, "is a reflection of the larger supply of farm labor due to the small volume of industrial employment at the present time." The supply of farm labor, stated by the Bureau, was 13 per cent more than the demand in the North Atlantic States and 21 per cent greater than the demand in the Far Western States.

"ROUND TOWN" ---by Doug

A sight-seeing trip round town these days will show the sightseer the keen rivalry between window decorators of our various drug stores. But some of said decorators must not be so good, because now and then I see a man from some cigarette house decorating the windows of the stores. One of our own most brilliant home-town window decorators is Albert Davis at Alred's. Albert seems to go into the work with feet, heart and head. And then there are those windows of some of our stores in Clanton, that really should be fixed up better than they are, and some that are absolutely vacant. Many of them I would like to try my decorative hand on for once. An unsightly display window of a store is certainly not a trade drawer, and it looks like some of our merchants would finally realize that fact.

Proving that a person can do something if he really wants to--there were four hundred and fifty-three persons attending the Sunday School at the Baptist church last Sunday, I was there, and I saw faces that I have never seen there before. No doubt it all was a novel experience for some of those. And if there had been forty-seven more there, Dewey Rockett would have had the pleasure of signing a fifty-dollar check made payable to the church, he having stated he would do that if there were five hundred there Sunday morning. I wonder if it can be truthfully said that Dewey was glad there weren't five hundred there.

Now that suggestions seem to be in order, I have a few that I would like to put forth. One is, that some sort of a stop signal, or "sound your horn" sign be placed at the alley between the old Clanton Produce Co., building and the Wright building, on Main Street, where so many people must pass on their way to the post office. I came very near wrecking a truck that was emerging from that alley the other morning. The driver failed to blow his horn, and I don't have one and my brakes didn't seem to work, so we came near having a smash-up. Really, something ought to be done about that now. To the city officials, I would say, "A word to the wise is sufficient."

Speaking of the various degrees one can earn in college, I have manufactured a degree that can be earned without ever seeing a college. It is the C. B. degree. Some few persons in Clanton have acquired that distinguished honor, and others could acquire it with a little practice. It is simply the Clanton Booster degree, and I will, with the greatest of pleasure bestow it upon anyone who places himself in a position to carry it. The rules are simple, and the course easy to take. Use your imagination, and later I will pass out the degrees as I see fit.

Perhaps one of the happiest moments of a man's life is when the friend to whom he has loaned a five spot, looks him up and pays it back just when he doesn't know where in the world he can get that amount. But who can remember a thing like that ever occurring?

Person after person seems to think that there are going to be two more big fires in Clanton, unless two big wooden buildings are torn down. It is so much more pleasant to think of them being torn down, because if either should burn, there is not telling what other damage will be done along with the burning. And boy, what a fire they would make. I shudder to think of it. And I just can't understand why the owners haven't done something about it. Time will tell, I suppose.

Judging from appearances, Glenn Boyd has made a record. He went to Washington last week, and returned with a clean collar on. I take my hat off to a man that can make a trip like that and still have one clean collar to wear home.

That a fellow has small chance to put over anything on the young ladies of Clanton, and that the ladies usually give him a thorough consideration from all angles, is shown by a part of a conversation I accidentally overheard the other day between two of our own fairer sex. Names have been substituted not to cause any embarrassment:

"I think Joe is the cutest thing. He has the most adorable smile, and the way he combs his hair is so smart. And don't you think he dances well, and he is always so neat looking. How do you like him?" "Oh, I like him all right, but he smokes Camel's and I just can't stand those things, they make me cough, and if he wouldn't go to see Rebecca, I'd like him better, wouldn't you? And I don't like the way he rolls his f's." So what chance does a fellow have. He must watch after every little detail. No wonder some of the fellows throw up their hands and turn a disgusted look toward such females, and say, "Aw, hang it all."

I'm going fishing in a day or so, and you can get prepared for some real fish tales. I intend to borrow William H. Loren Smith's license for telling fish tales, if Dr. "E. Epichorah!" Upchurch isn't using it, and establish a record in Clanton, for some of our experts to shoot at.

The News office received a pleasant visit from Victor H. Hanson's "Regrets," in the person of Dr. Frank Willis Barnett last week. He stated he had been down to the Capital City taking care of the U. D. C.'s until the Insurance Agent's Convention came to town, and things got pretty warm, so he left to go back to his sanctum at the Birmingham News, to write about the hidden beauties of the various hidden places in the State of Alabama--some of the things you read about but very seldom see.

The Leader seemed to be enjoying a busy afternoon last Saturday. But I don't wonder at that, because Mr. Lande avails himself of the use of newspaper advertising almost every week, and naturally the people have learned to look for his ads, because they know he usually puts out some bargains.

I have read in books about young ladies being so popular that they would have two or three callers in one night, but by jove, I've run upon the real thing here. Understand that we have a young lady, who, during the past week has had two suitors at her side quite often at the same time. Now, I wonder which is really doing the real courting. And then she may be able to make her choice by, "banker, doctor, lawyer, Indian Chief, rich man, poor man, beggar-man, thief."

Wonder why the Federal Reserve Board don't turn loose some of their reserve? We shd do need it right now.

Right now is a good time to talk about potential wealth and possibilities, don't you think so?

Why don't you use some of your natural resources here in Chilton County?

Do you remember who seconded Herbert Hoover's nomination in the republican convention in 1928, for president? Hee, Haw!

Republican or Democrat? What's the Difference?

The Pathfinder Magazine, Washington, D. C., received 47,762 replies in its contest for 50-word definitions to differentiate between a Republican and a Democrat. The result was announced October 3, 1928.

The winning definition from the Democratic viewpoint, selected by Senator Swanson of Virginia, was submitted by E. A. Cameron of Hermosa Beach, Cal., as follows:

"A Democrat believes in the doctrine of State's rights, a tariff on luxuries for revenue only and equality in all laws enacted, while a Republican believes in a strong, centralized Government, a high protective tariff on manufactured articles and legislation favoring special or vested interests."

The winning definition from a Republican viewpoint, selected by Senator Watson, of Indiana, was submitted by J. H. Helmick of Aurora, W. Va., as follows:

"A Republican believes in a strong Federal Government, protection to industry, free speech, press and religion; continued separation of Church and State, law enforcement, a high standard of living, and economy in government."

The winning neutral view definition, selected by Senators Swanson and Watson jointly, was submitted by G. A. Buhrow of this city, as follows:

"A Democrat seeks to find in the interpretation of principles as established by Jefferson, Cleveland and Wilson, the ideal government, while a Republican seeks the same result in the interpretation of principles as set out by Lincoln, Roosevelt and Coolidge."

State Will Award $1,000 For Essays

Prizes totalling more than $1,000 are to be awarded by the State Commission of Forestry during the next school year, to high school students and students of other similarly accredited schools in Alabama, who submit the best essays on forestry. It has been made known that this was decided at a recent meeting of the Commission and that the necessary funds have been subscribed by various prominent forest land owners and lumbermen of the State.

The tentative plan for these prizes, it was learned, is: "First, a one-year scholarship at any of the State's higher institutions of learning. Second, a trip to California. Third, a trip to Washington, D. C. Fourth, various cash prizes. It appears, however, that the matter of the program is still in a nebulous state, though it is to be definitely worked out during the summer."

Nearly all of these chickens are being fed according to recommendations made by the Experiment Station at Auburn. I wouldn't be without it—not if it cost twice as much

When Don and I first started keeping house we felt that we couldn't afford a telephone. There was the furniture to buy—linens—and a dozen and one little things that cost no end of money. Then one day after we had been married a couple of months I was left all alone. I expected Don for dinner but he didn't come—seven o'clock came but not Don—eight o'clock and still no word. I was frantic. Usually when Don was late he called Mrs. Brown next door or sent word by a friend who lived close by. After I felt that I couldn't wait any longer I ran to Mrs. Brown's to call Don's office, but Mrs. Brown wasn't there. Then I couldn't understand why I hadn't heard from Don through our friend.

If Don hadn't come when he did I believe that I would have gone crazy. He had tried to call Mrs. Brown but no one had answered, and our kind messenger friend was out of town. That incident cured us. We ordered a telephone the next day—my dear, it was a pleasant surprise to learn how reasonable the cost really is. But if a telephone cost twice as much I wouldn't do without it—not for a single day.

Why take a chance on any such thing happening to you when a telephone costs so little? Call the business office, or give your order to any one of the company's employees, and a telephone will be installed immediately.

GOODYEAR PLANT AT GADSDEN PRODUCES TIRE NO. 1,000,001

Officials of the Dixie plant of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company recently celebrated the building of tire No. 1,000,001 at the Gadsden plant. Mayor W. E. Weir of Gadsden, and other prominent residents of the city were present when the tire was made. More than a million tires in less than a year is the best record ever established by any of the new Goodyear plants. It required more than 10 years for the parent plant at Akron to reach its first million tires back in the early days of the industry.

As tire making progressed and Goodyear expanded, records were established with the opening of new plants. The Gadsden plant was opened officially July 11, 1929. The first tire at the Dixie plant was turned out the last of June.

Barred Republican Carries Up Appeal

M. F. Lett, who was denied participation in the Republican primary in Chilton County as a candidate for member of the county education board, because of his failure to comply with the rule of the county committee requiring all candidates to state how they voted in the last general election, and who failed in court action against the County Republican Committee, has taken an appeal to the Supreme Court of Alabama.

Refused entrance in the primary when he declined to make the required statement, Lett filed application in the Circuit Court, for a writ of mandamus to compel the County Committee to place his name on the ballot. The petition was presented to Circuit Judge Smoot, who sustaining the demurrer by the committee to Lett's bill, dismissed the petition. On appeal, Lett claims action of the committee in adopting the rule referred to, is illegal.

Decision of the Supreme Court in the case will be awaited with widespread interest. If the high court should deny application for rehearing in another case now before it, involving effort of Horace C. Wilkinson of Birmingham to join election of officers in Jefferson County from proceeding with arrangements for the holding of the Democratic primary August 12, on the ground that the State Democratic Executive Committee exceeded its authority in barring "bolters" from the primary as candidates—it is understood effort will be made to compel party authorities, by mandamus, to place the name of "holter" candidates on the Democratic primary ballot.

Mr. Stapp asks that all who are interested in raising chickens profitably to please help advertise these two meetings, because he thinks Mr. Bailey's visit to the county will be worth thousands of dollars to the poultry raisers if they will attend these meetings and let Mr. Bailey answer the many questions they have in mind.

Rate of Tree Growth

Studies made in the northern hardwood region by officers of the Forest Service, U. S. Department of Agriculture, indicate that the greatest timber growth increment occurs in partially cut stands. In virgin forests the logs from windfall and mortality practically offsets the growth. In clear cut areas which are restocking the estimated growth is at the rate of 55 to 65 board feet per acre per year, but this growth does not become available until the stand reaches an age of from 80 to 100 years. Selective cutting—that is, taking only the largest trees—accelerated the growth of the remaining trees and the growth ranges from 110 to 195 board feet depending on the number and size of the remaining trees.

Chicks of different ages should not be raised together. The older ones will crowd the younger; poorly developed birds will be the result.

News of the Churches

Next Wednesday night is the time for the union prayer meeting. It will be held in the new Baptist church for the first time. The hour is 7:30 and everybody is invited.

The group of young married women who for several years have constituted the Y. W. A. has "graduated" into a new organization calling itself "Circle 2 W. M. U." They will meet next Friday afternoon with Mrs. Sidney Davenport. The name Y. W. A. will descend to a younger, unmarried group.

The Congregational Sunday School observed Mother's Day by presenting a flower at the door to each person attending the morning service and shortening the lesson period to give time for a brief exercise of music and recitations. Rev. J. E. Each preached on the subject: "Honoring Our Mothers" and Miss Agnes Leary sang "Mother McCrew." The Flower Committee of the Christian Endeavor Society had charge of the flowers.

Timely Suggestions From The County Agent

Cotton Spacing

During the period of 1924 to 1929, a cotton spacing test has been conducted at Auburn on Norfolk sandy loam soil with, and without fertilizer, to determine the spacing in the drill and the number of plants per hill that will produce the highest yield of cotton per acre. All plots in the fertilized section are fertilized alike.

Average yields for the six-year period of the experiment show that a spacing of 18 inches in the drill with 2 plants per hill has produced the highest yield on the fertilized sections. Spacings of 18 inches with 4 plants per hill and 24 inches with 3 plants per hill made within 2 pounds of the yield of the leading plot. On the unfertilized section the highest yield was produced on the plot spaced 6 inches in the drill with 1 plant per hill. Yield on the plot spaced 24 inches apart with 3 plants per hill was less than 2 pounds of seed cotton per acre below the leading plot. Results obtained in this experiment, indicate that it is safe to recommend spacing cotton 18 to 24 inches in the drill with 2 to 4 plants per hill.

Side Application of Nitrate of Soda
The fertilizer tests conducted by the Alabama Experiment Station show that the best time to sidedress cotton is just before it begins to put on squares. Best results have been had with corn when the soda was applied around the corn when the corn was knee to hip high or about 40 days old.

Soy Beans
It is time to plant soy beans. Soy beans make fine hay. Every farmer in Chilton County should try to grow some good hay this year.

Soy beans make fine grazing for the chickens too. Plant one or more of the chicken yards in O'Too-Tan soy beans now and they will furnish shade and good grazing until frost.

Unburned Woods Moderate Drought

Abundant soil water retained in the earth under a rough ground cover of leaves, pine straw and other forest litter greatly offsets the effects of a drought, points out the Alabama Commission of Forestry. This feature is especially important in view of the fact that for the State of Alabama there has been a deficiency in rainfall for each month since November.

During the winter and late spring farmers who permitted their woodlands to burn over lost most of this moisture due to the rapidity with which the rainfall runs off and evaporates from the bare earth. On the other hand, those who took appropriate care of the wooded slopes and uplands found that the water retained under the rough cover seeped downward into the cultivated ground and placed their fields in much better condition than in the other cases.

The movement of water in the earth below the topsoil is a matter of very great importance in agriculture and in forestry. Anything that permits surface run-off or evaporation tends to alter moisture conditions in the soil. A winter fire burning slopes above a field may spell the difference between a successful and an unsuccessful crop from the cultivated land.

Three Years Ago

Following are accounts of news items taken from the News files of May 19, 1927:

The truck driven by W. F. Fiquette was fired into last week, while he was en route to Birmingham. The bullet struck the windshield. No motive could be found for this mysterious shot Mr. Fiquette stated.

Miss Clyde Jones celebrated her 11th birthday anniversary, with a party at the home of her mother here, last Friday.

Unlike the true clovers and alfalfa, sweet clover seldom causes bloat. However, during abnormally wet periods cases of bloating have been reported. To be on the safe side, do not turn cattle on sweet clover pasture when the sweet clover is wet. Even when it is dry, if the cattle have not been accustomed to it, fill them up with other feed before turning them on the sweet clover.

L & N TRAFFIC AGENT PAYS VISIT TO CLANTON MONDAY

Last Monday, Walter D. Shepard, Traffic Agent for Alabama, of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. was among the distinguished visitors to Clanton. While making his short visit, Mr. Shepard was a visitor to the News office. In a conversation with the L & N representative it was found that he was under the impression that the sooner the people of this section realized that the question of railroads versus busses, should not be given any consideration, due to the fact that the railroad is one of the largest taxpayers in the county, and that company alone should be given the consideration, the better it will be for them. Mr. Shepard also stated that the railroads not only pay yearly, a large sum in taxes to our county, but also has a large payroll in this section, employing many local people. This alone is worth much consideration from those persons who are more or less inclined to travel, and using the railroad or the busses.

J. H. Foshee Now At Kilby Prison

Mr. J. H. Foshee, who served the Town of Clanton a number of years ago as policeman, and then the county as deputy sheriff, under Sheriff T. J. Littlejohn, and who then went to the State Law Enforcement Department, has been recently appointed a deputy warden, located at Kilby Prison, by the state convict department. Mr. Foshee in all the capacities as a law enforcement officer has a record which his friends point to as being an officer who enforces the law without discrimination and his friends are glad to see him given this place of trust by the state.

BALDWIN BUYS CAR PUREBRED HEREFORDS

Bay Minette, Ala., May 15.—There is much interest among Baldwin County farmers in purebred cattle. They recently bought a carload of purebred Hereford bulls. Since that time many farmers have expressed a desire for more purebred sires, and arrangements are being made for the purchase. E. E. Hale, county agent, says farmers are of the general opinion that better sires will more than pay their cost in developing a better type of stock. He expects this to result in increased profits from livestock enterprises.

can gain there is around 1200 miles of road kept up by the county. Divide the above amount by 1200 and you will find that you have $518.58 per mile, that has been spent on public roads of the county in the past five years in some way. Mr. Tax Payer, do you think your road got its share or did the fishing camp road get it? All we have got over here is a mess of old rotten ramshackled bridges with a one-man road. Now really this is ridiculous in the face of all this Hoover prosperity that is sweeping the county. Soup wagons are no uncommon sight in cities like Birmingham and Atlanta. Many of the southern people have voted the Republican ticket believing it meant their prosperity to keep the Republican party in power. We now have a Republican President, a Republican House in full control of our government affairs, and listen, boys, that isn't all we've got. We have got one of the darndest panics I have ever witnessed, and I predict that this panic has not reached its worst yet by a long shot. It took eleven pages of the Age Herald last week to carry the property advertised for its taxes in Jefferson County. Talk about the Democrats causing hard times, if they can beat what Mr. Hoover and his gang are doing for us they are entitled to a gold medal as large as Stone Mountain.

A majority of the voters of Chilton County have sacrificed their rights to help elect our state officers, the most important offices to be filled, for the sake of a few pie hunters in Chilton County for the past twenty-five years. Why not come in and help nominate your next governor, another important office to be filled this year. Think it over coolly, friends, and seriously, and then do what you think is best for the good old Sunny South of ours. We all have one common cause, what will hurt you, will likewise hurt me, also. That is an undisputed fact. I am a friend to the common every day man. I believe my past record will clearly show that I can go without the office of Commissioner without any loss whatsoever. I am not asking for the office from a financial standpoint. I simply have an ambition to do something worthwhile for my county, and if I am successful I will do my best to prove this to you.

Thanking you for anything that you may be able to do for me.

Sincerely yours,
S. M. EDWARDS.

Milk production of dairy cows can not be increased above normal by the use of any drug or combination of drugs, says the veterinarian of the Food, Drug and Insecticide Administration. When decrease of milk production is due to disease the use of a nostrum instead of proper treatment may prove exceedingly costly to the owner of a dairy herd.

MATT'S LUNCH SHOPPE IS DOING SOME EXPANDING

During the past several days, workmen have been busy erecting an addition to the building of the Matt's Lunch Shoppe, on Seventh Street.

The addition, which is of brick, is being made at the rear of the building, and Mr. Ware, proprietor of the lunch shoppe stated that some time this week he will move the kitchen into the addition and enlarge the front of his place.

Mr. Ware also stated that some new fixtures will be installed in the lunch room, in the very near future, and that this expanding was due to the steady increase in business. It also might be added that Mr. Ware avails himself of the advertising space in the News, quite often.

JIM JOHNSON MEETS DEATH IN JEMISON

Struck By Auto While On Highway, Reports
Stated

Jim R. Johnson, age 71, was almost instantly killed Tuesday night, while walking along the highway at Jemison, Alabama. According to the reports reaching the News office, Johnson was among the several hundred who were attending the graduating exercises at the Jemison High School Tuesday night and was on his way home about ten o'clock when struck by an automobile, which is said to have been driven by Ed Brown, a young man from Thorsby. Brown was arrested Wednesday morning and placed under a thousand dollar bond.

A Martin ambulance from Clanton answered the call and rushed the man to Clanton, but he died while en route, it was stated. Johnson is a well known citizen of Jemison, Alabama, having lived there for something like sixty years. He was seventy-one years old Wednesday, and has been for some time employed as a night watchman. He is a member of the Methodist church, and considered rather active for his age. His ability to remember occurrences, was also brought to the mind of those who knew him.

Funeral services for Johnson were held yesterday afternoon at four o'clock at his home, with Rev. J. M. Metcalf of Verbena officiating. Burial followed in Pinehill cemetery near Jemison, Martin, of Clanton, in charge.

Surviving is the widow, Mrs. Reely Johnson. Three sons, Walter, Robert B. and Jack, all of Jemison, and two daughters, Mrs. Neelie Vanhuse of Cuba, Alabama, and Mrs. Mamie Duffey of Birmingham.

Masonic Home Drive Goes Over 100 Per Cent

A large number of Masons from Clanton and Chilton County were present at the regular stated Communication of Clanton Lodge No. 423 A. F. & A. M., last Tuesday evening, when Mr. T. G. Brobston, of Birmingham spoke in the interest of the Masonic Home of Alabama. Hon. Jimmie Jones, of Birmingham was scheduled to speak, but was unable to fill the engagement and Mr. Brobston, an outstanding Mason and business man of Birmingham, came in this stead. He proved to be a forceful and entertaining speaker and every Mason present responded to the appeal of Grandmaster R. F. Lovelady, brought to them by Mr. Brobston to pay the Home out of debt. The Masonic Home of Alabama is of inestimable value to the Masons of Alabama and from reports it is said that the drive, sponsored by Grandmaster Lovelady, and others, to get it out of debt, is receiving hearty support from the Masons throughout the State.

The F. C. Degree was conferred on Mr. J. C. Burnett, at this meeting which was presided over by Mr. Grady F. Harris, Worshipful Master of the Lodge.

all the time, to tell them. There are numbers of children who had infantile paralysis last summer who would like to come to the clinic to see what Dr. Sherrill would suggest—maybe a brace of some kind or possibly an operation or maybe just observation and no particular treatment. The clinic is absolutely free and does not obligate anyone in any way whatsoever. It is made possible by the Alabama Crippled Children's Society in order that every child in Alabama will be within 50 miles of a free clinic, at least once a year.

HEFLIN AND LOCKE SUPPORTERS CALL FOR MASS MEETING

FATS AND LEANS WILL PLAY TODAY

The baseball game between the Fats and Leans of Clanton is scheduled to be played this afternoon. The probable line-ups have already been arranged and judging from them this game is going to prove even more than interesting to those who are so fortunate as to witness it.

This game is being sponsored by Circle Number 2 of the local W. M. S. and the two teams have as their captains, Samuel Martin of the Fats and John Mullins of the Leans. Much comment is being caused by this game, and it appears, as if the odds are about even, judging from some of the comments heard at various places and times.

The probable line-up of the Leans is something like the following: catcher, John Mullins; pitchers, Leo Alred, Loren Smith, Rip Burnett; 1st base, "Pal" Pyron; 2nd base, Frank Mullins, M. M. Pugh; 3rd base, Frank James, or Reecie Taylor; short stop, Jesse Jones or Tom Pyron; left field, Bill Simpson; center field Bob Sumner and right field, Charles Moore or Cohen Stapp.

The Fats have a line-up that will probably be as follows: Catcher, Samuel Martin; pitcher, Red Wagoner or "Lefty Joe" Calloway; 1st base, Harry Gordon; 2nd base, Dewey Rockett; 3rd base, "Dief" Defender; short stop, "Catfish" Eubanks or Chief Bookholdt; left field, "Coose" Neighbors or Arthur Willis; center field, Maurice Lande; right field, DeWitt Easterling.

The above idea of the line-ups of the game Fats versus Leans, is enough to cause anyone to want to see this game. The admission will be ten and twenty-five cents. Game will begin at three o'clock this afternoon sharp, on the diamond at the high school.

GOLD STAR MOTHERS

This month the first contingent of Gold Star Mothers will visit the graves of their sons in France at the expense of the United States government. Wives of American soldiers who are buried in France are also eligible for these trips, provided they have not remarried.

According to the law under which these pilgrimages were authorized, there will be opportunities for trips also in 1931 and 1932, so that those concerned may choose the year most convenient for them.

Arrangements for the transportation and comfort of the mothers and widows are made by the War Department and a number of Army officers left for France last month in order to see that suitable accommodations are provided.

By making provision for these pilgrimages Congress did a most worthy and patriotic act. It is hoped that every American woman, who has a loved one buried "over there" may be able to take advantage of the government's generosity in arranging these pilgrimages.

J. N. Cooper, who served with the Southern Army during the War Between the States and Miss Clarice Sheppard, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. U. R. Sheppard, eloped from their home in Geneva, Ala., and came to Enterprise to be married.

They obtained a license at the office of Probate Judge Jefferson Carnley and were married by Justice of the Peace G. W. Carlisle.

"I've a good home, a new automobile and $6,000," Mr. Carlisle said the aged groom told him. The girl was eager to marry Cooper, Justice Carlisle said.

The young bride telephoned her parents at Geneva to come for her a few hours after the wedding, and the old man returned to the home of his daughter in Geneva. The couple are not living together now.

Motorized Cattle Thievery Becomes Menace To Owners

Selma, Ala., May 18.—The motorized cattle thief with a modern, elaborate organization has become a menace to the cattlemen of this section of the state to such an extent that a meeting of cattle owners and farmers will be held at the courthouse here Monday.

Joe Lambert, livestock owner of Orville, called the meeting and said that definite plans would be made to curb cattle thieves and to afford better protection to farmers.

The advent of the motor truck, with a capacity of several cows, and affording speedy transportation to other sections, has given cattle thievery a new stimulus, Lambert said.

Among the protective measures sought, Lambert declared, would be means of obtaining more widespread information of cattle sales in all sections, and, if need be, the formation of a patrol service by the cattlemen.

Favorite Recipes of a Famous Chef

As Told to Anne Baker By LOUIS DIAT, Chef, The Ritz Carlton, New York

The delightfully appetizing way French chefs have of preparing vegetables by adding a dash of sugar to restore or "point up" their natural sweetness, is becoming increasingly popular with American housewives.

Souffle Aux Epinards
Wash thoroughly and drain three pounds of spinach. Boil fifteen minutes in one cup of salted water to which one teaspoon of sugar has been added. Drain and press out all of the water. Rub through a coarse sieve.

Melt four tablespoons of butter, adding three tablespoons of flour to make a smooth paste. Add slowly one and one-half cups of milk. Cook and stir slowly until thick. Cool slightly and add the yolks of four eggs. Add the prepared spinach and one teaspoon of powdered sugar. Fold in the beaten whites. Pile in a buttered souffle dish and bake in a moderate oven and even over for twenty-five minutes.

Peas and Carrots in Cream—4 portions—Plunge two cups of fresh shelled peas into boiling salted water to which one teaspoon of sugar has been added. Boil slowly for twenty-five minutes. Cook six small diced carrots in the same manner. Drain them both and saute gently in two teaspoons of butter. Add salt and one teaspoon of sugar and blend with four tablespoons of boiling cream, which may or may not be thickened with three-fourths teaspoon of flour.

RAISE YOUR HAPPINESS LEVEL

Owen D. Young, who is regarded to be a very wise man, once remarked that one way to get the most possible out of life is "not to expect very much." B. C. Forbes, in an article in Sand and Spray, published in the interests of Chalfonte-Haddon Hall hotels, the leading hotels of Atlantic City: "That is genuine philosophy. Most of our experiences, after all, are mental. Certainly, our measure of happiness does not rise and fall with our bank account. Too many of us look upon health and happiness and prosperity as our normal due. When we experience anything less than one hundred per cent of this, we feel entitled to grumble."

"To raise your daily average of happiness, lower your expectations. Frankly realize that the millennium is not here, that earth is not heaven, that sorrow as well as joy is the human lot, that adversity has a habit of intermingling with prosperity, that there are valleys as well as hilltops along the pathway of life. Don't rate your deserts too highly; reason, rather, that you usually get what you deserve, if not more. Be humble."

"By adopting a wise mental attitude towards life, see if you can not thereby disarm or at least take the edge of disappointments and heighten appreciation of your blessings—and heighten your happiness."

To Eradicate Bermuda Grass

Bermuda grass is one of the most valuable pasture grasses in the Southern States; but in cultivated land it is a troublesome weed. To eradicate it, take advantage of its weak points. The plant can not withstand prolonged shade, and therefore it can be controlled by crops that produce dense shade alternated with row crops that can be planted in check rows and thoroughly cultivated in two directions. Another weakness of Bermuda grass is its inability to withstand severe cold. Consequently, fall plowing of infested land to expose the roots to winter freezing is recommended for the northern part of the area in which Bermuda grass grows.

Odds Up on Sliver-proof Glass Chariots

Milk Fed Pedestrians Bring Good Prices

By E. W. Melson

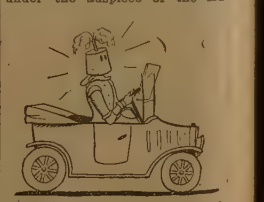

DOUBLE BREASTED suits of cast iron, lined with chrome sole leather, will be worn by the well dressed motorist this spring. We have had our ear to the ground. Paris advances decreed, knickers will be entirely ignored, if not openly snickered at, by the 26,634,210 car owners who will take the road this spring prepared to avenge dents in the radiator, abrasions of the fender and contusions of the gas tank, suffered in last year's road tourney.

The jousting this year will be very gay and jovial. Cars will be matched by weights, and all collisions will be carefully refereed by cheering spectators, selected for their agility, who will report round by round to the Workmen's Compensation Bureau. No head on gouging will be permitted except by cars equipped with scatter-proof glass and caterpillar tires. Armored tanks are taboo, except by agreement between the contestants. Tanks are too safe for the drivers and last year's accidents from this source were so low as to be laughable.

The prizes to be awarded by the casualty companies this year are about the same as last:

Complete Dislocation Right Elbow	$50.00
Partial Fracture Floating Rib	25.00
Well Mashed Toes (Large or Small)	12.50
Shin Bruises from Cranking	8.95
Kicked by Horse	4.75

Bookmakers are quoting heavy odds on cars equipped with shatter-proof glass. In last year's jousting many contestants were heste Tape & Plaster Association and the Auto Accessory and Garage Repairmen.

Pedestrians are looking forward with eager anticipation to the yearly festival. Their suits will be made of special alloy. Casualty companies have announced that they will pay $5,000 for the hands and feet of choice, milk fed, pedestrians, or $2,500 for either leg. There will be prizes for all and the winner on points will be given a steel engraving of Mussolini on his horse. Chambers of Commerce are urged to get behind this movement and have a Mardi-Gras in every community.

THE CHILTON COUNTY NEWS

J. B. ATKINSON, PUBLISHER

Published every Thursday at Clanton, Alabama in the interest of Clanton and the entire Chilton County

BILLY SMITH Editor

Entered in the postoffice of Clanton, Alabama, as second class matter under the Act of Congress of March, 1897.

Let Us Become Better Acquainted

When Mr. Atkinson, in December, 1926, purchased the plant of the Chilton County News, and turned over the management of the paper to your Editor, his instructions were to let the paper speak for itself, or in other words, let it do its own boasting. Those instructions have not been changed, and it is not the purpose of this article to boost the paper for the reason that we feel highly pleased from the many expressions, in the nature of favorable comment, from our many subscribers and patrons over the county and entire trade territory. We have worked earnestly to make the paper worthy of a place in the homes of the people of Clanton and entire Chilton County.

We want to get acquainted. We are therefore extending the farmers of Chilton County, and to those persons including men, women and children, who make up the population of the county, a most cordial invitation to make a visit to the News office and plant whenever they are in Clanton. This invitation is extended with the thought in mind, to become better acquainted with the people. There is nothing better than to have a good friendly chat with your friends, and it is certainly the policy of this newspaper to make friends and especially with all the people of this section. We want you to come to see us, and let us exchange ideas with you; we want to know your ideas whether it be concerning business, which includes your farming, or whether it be about politics, the editor is always glad to give his time in as profitable way as possible to obtain a general understanding of current events and happenings about the people of this County.

We realize there are many who are readers of this newspaper who have never become acquainted with the persons who make up the staff of the paper, and these readers will find a welcome awaiting them at the News office. It is the desire of the editor to know all those who read the News, and he would like to have information concerning any plans that may tend to aid the farmers in their work, because this newspaper is published in the interest of Clanton and Chilton County, which of course, means that it has the interest at heart of every farmer in the county. The editor was born and reared in Chilton County, lives in Chilton County and believes in Chilton County to the fullest extent, and thereby wishes to know everyone in the county.

It is the policy of this newspaper to assist in bringing about better living conditions for the people of the county, to attempt to discuss with them the various questions that may arise to affect their lives, and we are open to any suggestion that anyone may see fit to give. This newspaper will be a newspaper of the people, for the people, and by the people.

The Thomas Jefferson Revival

Celebrations of the birthday anniversary of Thomas Jefferson, founder of the Democratic party, have been more numerous and widespread this year than ever before in the history of the country. In a speech at St. Paul, under the auspices of the Minnesota Democratic State Committee, on April 21, J. J. Shouse, Chairman of the Democratic National Executive Committee, told his audience that when he left Washington his committee had tabulated 1,266 such celebrations.

"It is neither accident nor coincidence," said Chairman Shouse, "that the country wished to hear the recital of the principles that are the foundation of our government; to be reminded that ours is supposed to be a government for the maintenance of the rights of the average man—a true administration of public affairs with the minimum of interference and the maximum of liberty."

When it is coming on to storm, he said the same logic which causes the farmer to ask, "Is the roof of the barn rain tight? Has the road been graveled so that we won't bog down in a mudhole? Are the farm implements under cover?" explains why there is so much interest in the principles of Jefferson this year.

"For nearly ten years," declared Chairman Shouse, "our government has been a mockery of these principles."

In a Jefferson Day address at Denver, on April 14, Chairman Shouse applied some of Jefferson's principles to present day conditions. Referring to Republican "tariff prosperity," and the Farm Board advice to farmers to curtail their crops, he quoted Jefferson's instructions to American consuls abroad in 1792: "A prosperity built on the basis of agriculture is that which is most desirable to us, because to the efforts of labor it adds the efforts of a greater proportion of soil."

Citing what the Grundybund has done to widen the disparity between agriculture and industry after the Democratic-Progressive coalition had sought to bring about approximate parity, Chairman Shouse quoted Jefferson's statement 120 years ago: "I trust the good sense of our country will see that its greatest prosperity depends on a due balance between agriculture, manufactures and commerce."

Referring to the "dilution of responsibility by the use of Commissions," the speaker quoted Jefferson's written word 130 years ago: "Responsibility is a tremendous engine in free government. Let him (the Executive) feel the full weight of it by taking away the shelter of his executive council," and also citing Jefferson's protest in later years against "the screen of a council behind which to escape from responsibility."

The Rogers Plan

"Every time a Southern farmer plants nothing on his farm but cotton year after year, and the Northerner nothing but wheat or corn, why take a hammer and hit him twice right between the eyes. You may dent your hammer—but it will do more good than all the Farm Relief bills you can pass in a year."—Will Rogers.

"ROUND TOWN"

--by Doug

"All things I thought I knew,
But now confess,
The more I know I know,
I know the less."
—Owen.

I suppose everyone has some dark moments in their lives—and that includes myself too. And there are moments when one must be nonchalant. My most recent attempt at being nonchalant was when I was calling to see a young lady at a school for girls the other night and the steps to the building were not in tune with my steps and I had a stumble, despite my attempt at being dignified. I didn't even have a Chesterfield to light.

Well, so far there hasn't been any warning sign placed at that alley I spoke of last week. It may soon be too late. Better safe than sorry.

Speaking of depressions. There will be a slight depression for a few days in the social life of Clanton, now that our school teachers are leaving. But soon our young ladies off at school will return, and I hope they will do their best in eliminating this depression. And believe me, they have a job.

Isn't it funny how some people like to talk, just to have something to say. And there seems to be a few ladies here who delight in making threats toward people in all seriousness. How foolish they can be. And what a blessing it would be to them if they could see themselves as others see them. Oh, well.

Taking it all in all, I suppose it is a good thing we have such people. They set an example—not to follow.

The Dixie Cafe has a novel way of advertising, inviting people to be their guests on Sunday. The invitation appears in this newspaper each week. Better keep on the look out, you may be one of those who are lucky. You sure get a swell feed, free of charge, too.

If I had my way about things I'd certainly make a lot of changes. I'd have the Wadesonian ventilated better. Extend the corporate limits of Clanton, by some hook or crook. Write the truth about some things going on in Clanton, and print them. Give certain young ladies here some suggestions for improving themselves. Stay awhile at a home where a "Komfy Kottage" sign is hanging. Go back and live about three years of my life over, profit by some mistakes I've made. Remove that traffic post near Dr. A. Johnson's home. Refloor the basement of our hospital. Erect some "Welcome" and "Come Again" signs on the main highways to Clanton. Eat banana pudding every day. Have the weight of ice sold here, probed. Make our drug stores take their turns on Sunday opening. Let Earl Parrish read the News one day earlier. Modify the prohibition law. Put a ban on ladies smoking. Go to see a certain young lady twice a week. Have Judson College to run twelve months each year. Make three certain girls here eat lady-like in the picture show.

Most everyone wonders about things sometimes. I am among those who do that thing, more or less. I have often wondered, while making my history-making-trips round town, why I have never been invited to dine at the White House. Why Al Smith never asked my advice. Why Borah, Walsh, and Grundy haven't recognized the ability of some of the young men in Clanton. Why Chairman Legge or Secretary Mellon hasn't wired for some of the aforesaid young men to visit them in Washington. How the governors of the states have managed their affairs without the assistance of some of the men who talk so much here. Why Mullins & Moore haven't made some improvement on their building on the corner. What certain young men are going to do for the next three months of school vacation. Why more people don't spend their money in Chilton County—including the Commissioners Court. Who a certain young lady intends to marry "within about three years." Why some men look so foolish in knickers. How some folks get by without working. Who wanted to get rid of the manager of the local Bell Telephone office, and why. Who is going to run for mayor next time. Why the city doesn't do something about the freight trucks parking just anywhere, on Seventh street. Who originated the expression, "Oh, Yeah." What business is going to occupy the old post office stand. And I wonder what I will wonder next.

Did you ever know a person whom you would like to become better acquainted with, and found it difficult to do so on account of a seemingly outer crust of that person, that would not allow you to understand them? What method did you use to get underneath that crust? Was it kindness? If you did use kindness and failed, then there is only one thing left to do. Forget that crusty person.

And then there was the absent-minded Scotchman who forgot and dropped a nickel in the collection plate at church.

Any Town

Run over the list of towns with which you are familiar. Some of them are known as "dead" others are alive, wide-awake and modern, progressive towns.

This did not just happen this way. Dig into the history of the two classes of towns and you will find that the towns that are "dead" are ruled, dominated and controlled by men who do not want things changed. They shrink from improvements because they represent change and because they cost money. They frown on every movement that will produce a change.

On the other hand the towns that are known as "live" towns are ruled and controlled by live, wide-awake, progressive men who are leaders. They will make over any town in which they come to live. They would bring about all of the things that go hand in hand with modern progress.

The point is, it isn't its location, or resources that determine what kind of town it will be, it is in the people of the town. Their attitude of mind, their feeling, their vision—these are the things that build towns and without this, no town ever amounts to anything.

—Lineville Headlight.

Jack's Question Box

Do you know that constructive criticism and unselfish co-operation will improve the educational system of our county, better than anything else?

Can you imagine that an official of our school system would be so little as to say that he was going to see that only republicans were employed as principal teachers, in this county?

Can you tell why that Chilton County does not share in the $900,000.00 Equalization fund, provided by the state?

Why don't you inform yourself, why that Chilton County does not share in the $900,000.00 Equalization fund, that the state provides for those counties who comply with the requirements?

Why don't the Commissioners court of this county and the school board co-operate and provide an adequate school term, with adequate buildings?

Can you point out one outstanding accomplishment the Commissioners Court of this county has obtained, by the expenditure of over a Million Dollars, during the last past five years.

Do you get the spirit of progress when you read that the following are the counties that shared in the state equalization fund this year, viz:

Green Manures

Its effect on the quantity and quality of the succeeding crop is usually the farmer's measure of the desirability of green manuring, but failure to get as increase in crop yield can not always be blamed to the green manure.

JOURNALISTS WILL MEET AT AUBURN

Preliminary Plans Are Made To Entertain Newspaper Men

Auburn, Ala., May 18.—Three months ahead of schedule preparations are being made at Auburn for entertaining newspaper men of the state at the second Alabama Press Institute, August 14-16. The institute will be a joint project of the Alabama Press Association, of which Emmett Brooks, editor of The Brewton Standard, is president, and the Alabama Polytechnic Institute. Marcy B. Darnell, editor of The Florence Herald, is vice president of the Press Association and chairman of the institute committee.

During their three days in Auburn newspaper editors and publishers will live in one of the college dormitories and have their meals in the college cafeteria. The aim is to make it a house party under college conditions.

While preparations are being made President Knapp has extended an invitation to all members of the newspaper fraternity to come to Auburn for the occasion. The first institute, conducted last year, was largely attended, with more expected this year. The first, newspaper men declared, was an outstanding success.

The program this year will be pitched along a different line, the general theme being, "Making a Better Newspaper." Prominent weekly and daily newspaper men within the state will appear on the program. Along with these two or more outsiders will be present. Already Prof. John H. Casey, head of the department of journalism of the University of Oklahoma, and Russell Kent, Washington correspondent for The Birmingham News-Age-Herald, have accepted invitations to come to Auburn and help in conducting the institute.

Prof. Casey is the man who selects the mythical "all-American newspaper" each year. Kent is a veteran Washington correspondent. He recently has completed a term as a president of the National Press Club at Washington.

Goodyear Offers High Grade, Low Priced Tire, Says Mr. Dief

Good tires and high prices are associated in the minds of most motorists, but the impression that a sturdy and serviceable tire can not be purchased at a low price is erroneous, according to Dief's Service Station, local Goodyear dealer located at Clanton.

"Ten years ago the leading tire companies, such as the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., of Akron, concentrated their efforts on turning out one high class brand of tire and no attempt was made to make inexpensive tires.

"However, with the use of cars fast becoming universal and the increased business growing into an important factor of the industry, various grades of tires are now available.

"The Goodyear Company was one of the first to recognize the importance of offering a high grade, low priced tire.

"The Pathfinder tire is the result. This big burly brute of a tire is comparable to the infantryman's field boot. It is husky and rugged, but surprisingly inexpensive.

"While the Pathfinder was developed primarily as a low-priced quality casing, it incorporates many characteristics of beauty which make it suitable for use on the snappiest sport roadster, or the most dignified sedan.

"Millions have been spent by Goodyear to make the Pathfinder a product worthy of the name that appears on more than one-fourth of all tires used in the United States."

PLEDGE FOR FARMERS

We read of a movement among farmers of an Eastern state which might well be extended to other states as a means of overcoming the agricultural depression.

The idea is that each farmer should sign a pledge to produce his food and stock feed on his own farm, so far as possible, in order to more nearly have his "money crops" clear at the end of the year.

An example of what such a pledge includes is given in the following points:

- I will—
- Raise my own stock feed
- Raise my own meat
- Have a good garden
- Provide my milk and butter
- Keep at least 30 good hens
- Have or start an orchard
- Plant soil improving crops
- Encourage my children to take part in club work
- Add home conveniences
- Beautify my homestead.
- Farmers who take such a pledge and live up to it will be very likely to be ahead of the game at the end of the year, especially if they also adopt better production and marketing methods along with their "live at home" program.

The cabbage worm, one of the worst pests of cabbage, can be controlled if an arsenical poison is applied as soon as damage is detected and before the worms become too abundant. Lead arsenate, calcium arsenate, and Paris green are effective poisons and may be applied either as a spray or as a dust. Arsenicals are safe to use until the heads of the cabbage are nearly formed, because the poison disappears almost entirely within 2 or 3 weeks after application. All outer leaves of treated cabbage should be removed before the cabbages are marketed or consumed.

If it were necessary to have a reason for eating watermelons, there is one. Scientists have found that ripe, red watermelons of the Tom Watson variety supply abundantly at least two of the vitamins, and contain two others in detectable quantities.

Choose Your Make-Up Wisely, Then Apply It Very Carefully

I CAN remember when rouge, lipstick, and even face powder were considered a little disgraceful by many people. Twenty or thirty years ago, if a woman's skin was too pale or sallow, she just dabbed on a little pink or white powder, thinking that this would help. Common sense finally made us realize that white or pink powder alone simply cannot look natural on any skin.

So many shades of powder and rouge are made now, that if you choose your make-up wisely, and apply it carefully, you never will need to be dissatisfied with your appearance. Ordinarily, the only time it is necessary to mix powder tones is when your skin is sallow, or your tan is fading, and you must make your powder blend with your changing skin tones.

It is very important to select the correct shades of powder and rouge, so I want to give you a few hints:

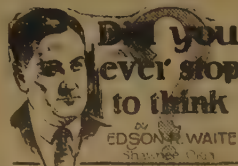

Rouge for the pale skin with too little natural coloring must be selected carefully. Too-dark rouge takes all the charm from this type of skin, while a too-pale tint does not accent the coloring enough. I suggest cream rouge in a carmine shade. Brunette or rachel powder will provide a perfect finish for the pale skin.

Older women usually find their skins getting ruddier than they like. Clever make-up will do wonders for your skin if it is this type. Above all, be very careful about your rouge. You may not need rouge at all, but if you do, apply it sparingly. A bit of crimson cream rouge is best. Above all, never use rouge with a dark purplish tinge, for this shade of rouge is unbecoming to any skin. And pinkish powder would be all wrong for a ruddy skin—which needs a light tan powder to tone down its color.

Perhaps your skin is perfectly healthy but somehow lacks distinction, and looks a little sallow at times. Or perhaps it is darker than it should be from sunburn and neglect in the past. In either case, rouge is very important, for without it, women with this type skin often look ill, even though they feel perfectly well. I recommend cherry or carmine rouge. The right rouge correctly applied can change this type from plainness into beauty.

As to powder, let me emphasize the importance of selecting a shade that will take the yellowness away from your skin. A peachy glow—that is, a combination of yellow and pink tints—is the best powder for a sallow or darkened skin. Peach tints are found in brunette or rachel powder. If this seems too pale, mix a little of the best powder, and shake up the box carefully to get a perfect match for your skin.

That the merchant who has faith in himself, faith in his business and faith in his city is a liberal advertiser.

Advertising not only brings direct benefit to the store that advertises, but it brings people from the surrounding country to the city, and they seldom spend all their money in one store.

Liberal advertising builds bigger, and better newspapers.

Newspapers are the leading light of a city; they are city builders; they are leaders in every activity of a city.

No home-seeker, investor or industry looking for a place in which to locate will tarry long looking at a city that does not support its newspapers. When a city has sick looking newspapers, it's a cinch the business of that city is sick. Who wants to live or do business in a sick looking city?

Your newspaper is your flag of progress. It shows the spirit of progress of your city.

H. Campbell Jones, managing director of the Sydney (Australia) Sun, says

That truth and service win in advertising as in every other human activity.

There were days when much advertising was as far from fact as the advance posters of a traveling circus.

But time has taught every person concerned in salesmanship that honesty is the best policy.

A one sale man can prosper for a few weeks or even a few months in a decent sized city, but the man who can not go back to his first buyer, or, as a solicitor, to the firm which gave him his first order, is about as useless as Esquimaux Pie in Hell.

Today only the person of subtle intellect can separate advertising from news. And most times he is wrong.

No modern newspaper can win a large circle of readers unless it is absolutely trustworthy and renders public service. And advertising and news are one and indissoluble.

Dairy Cow Used To Boost Income

Tuscaloosa, Ala., May 22.—Evidence that farmers of Tuscaloosa County are using the dairy cow to increase their income is presented by the fact that the condensery here is receiving 29,000 pounds of milk daily with the supply steadily on the increase. R. C. Lett, county agent, recalls that this is 3,000 pounds more than was received on any day last year.

Mr. Lett is visiting dairymen in order to encourage them to plant more forage crops for their cows in a hope that a large acreage of soybeans, cowpeas, and sudan grass will be grown, he stated.

Additional Potash Is Profitable

In demonstrations conducted during the past two years 74 Alabama farmers added enough potash to their regular fertilizer going to cotton to make the potash used more than three times as much as contained in the regular fertilizer. Most of the extra potash was applied as a top-dressing, and where it was used the average return was $4.06 for each $1.00 invested in it.

In all parts of Alabama last year farmers tried extra potash in their general applications of fertilizer to cotton and there was great satisfaction over the profits it gave them. Alabama farmers have begun to realize that potash plays a bigger part in the economical production of cotton than previously thought. They have found that heavier applications of potash to cotton keeps down diseases, reduces shedding to a minimum, makes bigger bolls and improves the quality and percentage of lint.

Chilton County Abstract Co.

M. D. FOSHEE, Manager

A good business man will not buy a farm or any property without first looking it over to see what it is worth. However, some will buy or loan money on land without an abstract.

Isn't it equally as foolish to buy a farm without looking it over as to buy it and not know whether the titles are good or not? Without an abstract you do not know where you are getting the land you look at or not.

Before investing in land in any way have an abstract made and be safe.

Hints For Homemakers

By Jane Rogers

WHEN washing fine lace, instead of starch use two lumps of sugar to a basin of water.

A tablespoon of powdered pumice mixed with enough linsed oil to make a thin paste is excellent for removing white water stains from furniture. Rub the mixture on the spots until they disappear. Wipe off carefully with a soft cloth dampened with furniture polish.

Adhesive tape is a good emergency mending material for rents in rain coats, galoshes and umbrellas.

Eggs Bring Group $100 Income Daily

Columbiana, Ala., May 22.—Farmers of one community in Shelby County realize an average income from eggs of $100 a day, reports A. A. Lauderdale, county agent. The eggs are carried to the Birmingham market at the rate of 100 cases a week. The farmers receive from 25 cents to 30 cents per dozen. Some poultry is also being marketed.

Fund For Stadium At Auburn Is Started Off Well With Two Large Donations

Auburn, Ala., May 19.—A $100,000 stadium for the Alabama Polytechnic Institute moved swiftly toward a reality at the alumni meeting here Monday when Victor Hanson arose and asked permission to make a donation of $10,000 as a starter. Immediately Thomas Bragg, also of Birmingham, arose and offered a donation of the same amount.

Following these offers the Board of Trustees adopted a resolution asking the alumni to back the movement and naming it Knapp Stadium in honor of President Bradford Knapp.

As the concluding act of their business session the alumni as a body adopted a resolution endorsing the plan of construction of the stadium as explained to them by President Knapp and pledge their support in erecting it.

Dr. Knapp told the alumni that the student body proposed the erection of a stadium and that 50 leading students have been untiring in their efforts to make it a reality.

His explanation was made before the offers came from Mr. Hanson and Mr. Bragg. It was that 1,000 alumni and friends each buy a $100 share that will pay five per cent. Students will contribute to the operation of the stadium, he said.

Following the business session the alumni and friends adjourned to a barbecue during which a brief business session was held and Mr. Hanson elected an honorary member of the alumni association, "not alone for his offer to help erect a stadium, but for the untiring service he has rendered to Auburn as a trustee and as a citizen of Alabama."

The meeting was attended by a large number of alumni representing every section of the State. All went away confident that a stadium will become a reality.

LABORATORY DEDICATED

Auburn, Ala., May 19.—With impressive ceremonies Monday afternoon, the Ross Chemical Laboratory at the Alabama Polytechnic Institute was dedicated to science and the material and spiritual development of Alabama by President Bradford Knapp. The new building, erected and equipped at a cost of $280,000, is now in use. It was accepted for the State by Gov. Graves.

Following the dedication, memorial exercises were held for the late Dr. Bennett Battle Ross, in whose honor the building is named. Addresses were made by T. D. Sanford, member of the board of trustees; Gen. Robert E. Noble, of Anniston, and Thomas Bragg of Birmingham, of the alumni; Dean George Petrie of the college faculty, Prof. C. L. Hare of the chemistry faculty, and Lawrence F. Camp of Moreland, Ga., of the student body.

The past 40 years at Auburn was referred to by Dean Petrie as the "Ross Epoch." He spoke of the new building as a crystallization of the life of Dr. Ross and praised the chemist as a charming personality, as a man of broad vision, as an internationally known chemist, but especially as a great teacher. He looked upon the new building as the harbinger of a new day for Auburn.

Jim Mims and family of Center Point, spent the past week end here with his mother, Mrs. Mattie Mims.

Suing for divorce for cruelty, Geo. N. Smith of Chicago testified "she proposed to me all of a sudden and before I knew it we were married."

DID YOU KNOW THAT

Alabama ranked first among south-eastern states during 1928 in total capacity of public utility electric power generators. In this year the United States Geological Survey computed the potential waterpower of the state as follows: available 90 per cent of time, 472,000 horsepower; available 50 per cent of time, 1,050,000 horsepower.

Rural electrification has developed rapidly in the state, more than 200 miles being in operation in 1929, serving approximately 6,000 customers. In the state at large more than 475 cities, towns and communities are served through a total of more than 7,000 miles of lines. Electric energy has increased in Alabama more than 1,200 percent since 1915.

The state offers various underground sources of water supply through artesian wells and pumping systems. Many municipal water supplies come from these underground sources. The state's underground water supply comes from an average rainfall of 2,104.494 gallons daily per square mile, based on an average of 52 inches per year. A direct surface run-off of less than 15 per cent is estimated for the state as a whole.

Alabama is one of the 19 states in the United States classified as "soft-water" states, that is, averaging less than 55 parts of calcium and magnesium per million. Investigation has shown that softness of water supply results in a saving of from five to ten per cent in annual fuel bills in heating this non scale water. To the housewife a saving of soap, fabrics and fixtures is noticeable.

Alabama is served by 15 lines of standard railway and 22 secondary lines. Each of the 67 counties in the state is afforded some form of railroad transportation, the majority by main line connections. The total passengers carried in 1929 were 5,689,151. The total freight hauled was 59,390,417 tons of revenue freight and 6,659,016 tons of non-revenue freight.

William Penn paid the King of England sixteen thousand pounds—about $80,000—for what is now the State of Pennsylvania. Considering the increase in land values in that now teeming and wealthy area, the deal stands out as one of the grandest real estate transactions in all recorded time.

During George Washington's administration the National Capital was first in the city of New York and later in Philadelphia. In 1800, when John Adams was President, the center of government was moved to Washington, called a "city" by courtesy and ridiculed by the foreign diplomats as a "wilderness" and a "swamp." Gradually, however, L'Enfant's vision of a beautiful and stately Capital became a reality.

When the great sculptor, Bartholdi, fashioned the Statue of Liberty which now stands on Bedloe's Island in New York harbor, he was working under orders from France, not at the behest of the United States.

The statue was a gift from the French people to this nation and was paid for by popular contributions in France. The cost of the pedestal was borne by this country. The statue was presented by De Lesseps, diplomatist and creator of the Suez Canal, and was accepted by President Grover Cleveland.

Gambling was not only a lawful and respectable pursuit in this country at one time, but the Government itself engaged in it. In 1776 occurred the "Congress Lottery." The Continental Congress, desperate for money, hit upon a lottery scheme as a way to gather in a few dollars. It authorized the sale of a certain number of tickets and a subsequent drawing for prizes. All the prize winners were given certificates for various sums payable at the end of five years.

The first newspaper was the Boston Weekly News Letter, published in 1704. As a rule at that time news of current events got around by word of mouth. Occasionally, when a man in one settlement received a "newsy" letter from a friend at another point, he tacked it to a "bulletin tree" or to the door of an inn so that all his "neighbors" might read it when they rode in from widely scattered points.

After he testified his wife had not been sober for two years, Robert F. Cestrom of Buffalo was granted a divorce.

Horace Clayton of Cardiff was sent to prison for offering to sell his wife to a neighbor for $50.

Drouth Is Over;
Flood Warnings

The definite breaking of the drouth in Alabama was signalized Monday night when P. H. Smyth, government meteorologist issued a flood warning. During the previous 24 hours, 1.09 ins. of rain fell in Montgomery, with precipitation of varying measurements being recorded in other sections of the state.

Flood warnings do not necessarily mean dangerous conditions, but are routine of the weather bureaus. The warning issued Monday night, relayed from the observation bureau at Mobile read:

The Tombigbee River at Aberdeen, Miss., will reach flood stage, 33 feet, Tuesday and crest of 35 feet about Thursday.

The Tombigbee River, at Demopolis will reach 58 feet about next Monday, May 26. Flood stage at Demopolis is 39 feet.

The Black Warrior River at Tuscaloosa will probably reach a crest stage of 60 feet Tuesday.

News In Brief

Americans spend a staggering sum at soda fountains for drinks. It is estimated that they spent $725,000,000 in this way in 1929. This figure does not include fountain food service which is estimated to have totaled close to $250,000,000.

Dr. Joseph Lignieres, noted French bacteriologist, says that he has discovered a vaccine against foot and mouth disease in cattle and will report the details to the International congress on veterinary medicine which will meet in London, August 4 to 9.

David Sarnoff, president of the Radio Corporation of America, predicts that instead of the 20,000 theaters now operated in the United States, there will be in the future what he termed 20,000,000 home theaters, where radio sets will receive vocal and visual entertainment through television.

The Red Cross may establish a highway emergency service. Speaking of it, James L. Fieser, vice chairman in charge of domestic operations, predicted that automobiles would kill 400,000 and injure more than 10,000,000 within the next ten years. He explained that the service would not be a substitute for medical care, but would meet the need until the physician arrives on the scene.

Miss Bill Wells has returned to her home near here after undergoing an operation in a Birmingham hospital.

J. E. Lett of Verbena was a visitor to Clanton last Tuesday.

John Durwood Mullins was a visitor to Birmingham last Friday.

Hints For Homemakers

By Jane Rogers

WHEN feeling all tired out in the afternoon after a strenuous day in the home, at the office, or shopping downtown, try eating a few pieces of candy as a pick-me-up. The sugar which the candy contains is the quickest acting of all the energy foods, and its beneficial effect upon fatigue is felt almost immediately.

It is a good idea to put small casters on the wooden box in which the children keep their toys. The children can then easily pull the box from place to place for play, or it can be pushed out of the way when not in use.

STATE CAPITOL NEWS

Only ten per cent of the pupils enrolled in Alabama schools were in one-teacher schools in 1929, according to figures from the State Department of Education. That steady progress is being made in eliminating the one-teacher school is shown by the fact that as late as 1921, 21 per cent of the pupils were taught in schools of this type. In 1928, 68 per cent of all the school children enrolled in Alabama attended schools taught by three or more teachers, and 38 per cent of them were in schools with six or more teachers. The number of one-teacher schools in the State decreased from 2,280 in 1920 to 1,261 in 1929.

Educational leaders state that because the one-teacher school is lacking in vitalizing activities, in supervision, equipment and general community interest, it is inefficient when compared with schools having two or more teachers. An enlarged faculty brings a more flexible administration, more easily adapted course of study, more opportunity for purposeful student activities, and consequently better teaching.

Governor Bibb Graves has appointed Theodore Swann of Birmingham, Otto Agricola of Gadsden, and Isadore Weil of Montgomery, to constitute the Board of Censors of the Alabama State Docks. The legislative act creating the State Docks Commission provides for appointment of the Board of Censors, whose duty it shall be to make inspection of the books, business and general activities of the Docks Commission, and report their findings to the Governor with such suggestions and criticisms as they see fit. Of the three men named on the Board of Censors Swann is a widely known industrial leader, Agricola a leading banker and business man, and Weil a member of the firm of Weil Brothers, one of the biggest cotton concerns in the South. The Alabama State Docks at Mobile passed from the construction stage to the operation stage April 1st of this year.

Lieutenant-Colonel John C. Persons of Birmingham has been appointed by Governor Graves as Brigadier-General commanding the 62nd Infantry Brigade which is composed of the 167th Infantry, Alabama National Guard, and the 124th Florida Regiment. General Persons is president of the American Traders National Bank of Birmingham and is a World War veteran. He saw active service in major battles in France, and received the distinguished service award for his conduct in action. He succeeds as Brigadier-General, General Walter Z. Bare, who resigned to accept a promotion with the Southern Bell Telephone Company, which took him to Atlanta.

John J. Flowers of Dothan, prominent Houston County citizen and Auburn graduate, has been appointed by Governor Graves as a member of the Auburn Board of Trustees. He succeeds Charles S. McDowell of Eufaula, who resigned.

Forty-five bales out of every 100 bales of cotton, were untenderable on future contracts, because of short staple, according to figures compiled by F. W. Gist, State and Federal Statistician with the Department of Agriculture.

This means that nearly half of the 1929 crop was under 7-8 inch in length and therefore was sold at a penalty to the spinners. Only 4 bales in every thousand were 1 inch staple or better.

From the above it is easy to see that Alabama produces very little of the longer lengths of staple. Alabama is producing more and more of the shorter lengths of staple every year. This is in spite of the demand for more and more longer fiber.

Long fibered, strong elastic staple cotton is needed in increasing amounts in America today. Such cotton not only is used for lace and fine fabrics, but for high pressure and high duty purposes such as tires of powerful automobiles, fire hose, belts, etc.

Illustrative of the demand for the stronger cotton fibers than the market can supply, is the demand for tires on racing cars. No manufacturer will undertake to construct a tire for the fastest racing car, such as hold the world's records at Daytona Beach, that will last more than 15 minutes at speeds of 3 miles per minute.

Although the public demand is for longer, stronger and more elastic staple Alabama is growing percentage of shorter staple. Half and half is the most popular variety of cotton and this is seemingly on the increase.

Sewell Advises Wean With Care

Auburn, Ala., May 22.—Proper care of sows and pigs at weaning time will greatly reduce losses to Alabama hog growers in the opinion of W. E. Sewell, assistant professor of animal husbandry at the Alabama Polytechnic Institute.

"At eight weeks of age is a good time to wean pigs because they are usually able to eat grain at that time," he said. "The sow's feed should be reduced and the feed of the pigs increased by slowly changing the pigs from a milk to a concentrate ration. When pigs begin to eat from the mother's trough at three to four weeks of age they should be provided with a creep of slatted bars where feed can be kept before them at all times right up to weaning.

"They will eat more and more of the concentrate mixture and as the sow's ration is reduced from one week before weaning the pigs will replace their lessened milk supply with concentrates and hardly miss the sow the day she is removed. The sow's feed should be reduced from her full ration for one week before weaning, step by step, until the day of weaning when she should be receiving only a pound or two. This reduces the milk flow to the pigs and causes them to change slowly to concentrates. If the sow is continued on the light ration for a week or so after weaning there is much less likelihood of caked or spoiled udders."

On the day of weaning the sow should be transferred to a lot where she can not hear or see the pigs. Professor Sewell added. In his opinion it is best to leave the pigs in the lot where they were raised.

FOOD VALUE OF Chocolate NEHI

Report of Chemical Analysis
WESTFIELD TESTING AND RESEARCH LABS., WESTFIELD, MASS.
Lewis B. Allyn, Director

November 8, 1927.

Nehi Incorporated, Columbus, Ga., Gentlemen:

Examination of several bottles of Nehi Chocolate Beverage shows that each 9-ounce bottle contains on an average: 249 calories.

9 ounces of average milk shows a calory value of 183

The total sour matter in the Nehi Chocolate Beverage, consisting of cocoa and milk solids, is 20.88 per cent. A good quality of milk average approximately 14 per cent total solids.

In addition to the comparatively high calory value of Nehi, its ash or mineral content is of an alkaline nature which tends to reduce acid conditions. As you are doubtless aware, for purposes of the most effective nutrition, the child must eat some food which gives an acid reaction, such as meat or cereals, and other foods which give the opposite or alkaline reaction, for example, fresh vegetables, milk, and the like. Nehi belongs to the alkaline producing foods which play an important role in our daily well being.

Compared with ordinary carbonated soft drinks, Nehi Chocolate Beverage contains 2 to 3 times as much solid food material.

Respectfully submitted,

L. B. ALLYN.

Every Day Sandwiches for Father and Son

By JOSEPHINE B. GIBSON
Director, Home Economics Dept., H. J. Heinz Company

WHEN lunches must be carried to work or school every day, the problem of providing an interesting variety of sandwiches becomes vividly real. The fillings must be chosen carefully, so the sandwiches will be moist and well-flavored, instead of dry and tasteless.

You will find that this task of providing "different" sandwiches is made much easier if you keep a variety of seasonings on hand. For instance, Worcestershire or horseradish sauce gives roast beef and sliced tongue an entirely new zest. While a bit of prepared mustard adds piquancy to corned beef or ham. Veal and lamb sandwiches are particularly good with tomato ketchup, mint sauce or sliced pickles. Of course, prepared sandwich relish needs no additions whatever—and it provides a delicious change that everyone enjoys.

Here are some helpful suggestions:
Egg and Pickle Sandwiches—Hardboiled and chop finely 1 egg for each person. For every egg used, add 1 tablespoon mayonnaise salad dressing and 1 tablespoon fresh cucumber relish or other chopped pickle. Spread on buttered bread, cover with a lettuce leaf, then with another slice of bread, and cut into desired shape.

Flaked Fish Sandwiches—Mix together 1 cup flaked cooked fish, (canned tuna fish or salmon may be used), ½ cup chopped celery or lettuce, 2 tablespoons chopped sweet pickles, ¼ cup mayonnaise salad dressing, 1 tablespoon tomato ketchup or chili sauce, and salt and pepper to season. Spread between slices of buttered bread. Peanut Butter and Pickle Sandwiches—Spread one slice of bread with peanut butter, and another with India relish or other chopped pickle. Press the two slices firmly together, and shape as desired.

Ham and Egg Sandwiches—Chop finely 3 hard cooked eggs, and moisten with 2 tablespoons cream. Add ½ cup chopped cooked ham, and 1 teaspoon Prepared Mustard Sauce. Mix together, and spread between slices of buttered bread. Cut and wrap carefully.

Chicken Liver Sandwiches with Tomato Ketchup—Mash cold cooked chicken livers, and moisten with tomato ketchup. Spread on slices of buttered bread, and shape as desired.

Pasturing sheep on annual crops makes it possible to rotate pastures more frequently. This lessens the danger of infection by stomach worms and other parasites.

According to the Bureau of Dairy Industry, it is necessary to remove cows from garlic-infested pastures 4 to 7 hours before milking to eliminate the garlic flavor and odor from the milk.

Young pasture grass should be grazed closely enough to keep the leaves growing and to prevent the development of heavy stalks. Such grass is richer in protein and soluble carbohydrates and is more readily digestible than older grass in which more stalks have developed.

Nitrogen Potash Top Dresser

In demonstrations conducted during the past 2 years 74 Alabama farmers used approximately 3 times as much potash as they had been using to cotton. This extra potash was used in addition to the regular fertilizer application. The return was $4.06 for each $1.00 invested in extra potash. In most cases the extra potash was used as a top-dressing. Potash keeps down diseases, reduces shedding to a minimum and makes bigger bolls. Our nitrogen-potash top-dresser contains nitrogen and potash in the combination that has proven very profitable in Alabama.

INTERESTING NEWS FROM THORSBY

Mr. Harry Petersen and family of Birmingham spent last Wednesday with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Petersen.

Mrs. T. L. Robinson and her cousin, Miss Whiteley of Birmingham, have been visiting Mrs. T. W. Robinson.

About fifty friends of Mr. Martin Peterson celebrated his 68th birthday by giving him a surprise party last Saturday evening. They carried supper with them which they ate with much jollity on the lawn in spite of the threatening showers.

Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Kitchell and daughter, Jean, of Birmingham were Sunday visitors at the home of Mr. W. L. Leary.

Miss Lois Primm has finished her year of teaching at Lock 12—excuse us, we meant Lay Dam—and will be at home for several weeks before starting for Chapel Hill, N. C., to attend the summer session of the University of North Carolina.

The Guild Social will be held with Mrs. Anna Villadsen next Thursday afternoon.

Rev. O. O. Eckhardt of Pierson, Fla., spoke in the Lutheran church both morning and afternoon last Sunday. Rev. and Mrs. Eckhardt were formerly missionaries in India and his subject Sunday afternoon was "Ten Years Among the Untouchables of India."

Mrs. J. E. Each had as dinner guests Sunday Mr. V. H. Sutlive and his mother, Miss Jennie Thoroman and Miss Ruth Gerald.

Mr. James Bosworth has been confined to his home for nearly a week as the result of an auto accident in which he played the leading part last Thursday afternoon. In attempting to pass a car on the highway between Thorsby and Clanton he was crowded off the embankment into the ditch where his car turned a double somersault throwing him through the roof. Though considerably bruised, scratched, shaken and twisted he was so fortunate as to escape without any permanent injury.

"Sally" Is To Be Big Attraction Here Soon

A picture that has been talked about in Clanton for several weeks is now booked and scheduled to be shown at the Wadesonian Theatre next week. This all-talking picture is "Sally", and has shown in the larger cities for long runs at single houses.

"Sally" will be shown here on next Wednesday, Thursday and Friday nights, May 28, 29, and 30. Among the characters appearing in this picture are many well known and popular stars of the screen.

The management of the local theatre has announced that to those whose first name is Sally, they are entitled to a free ticket to see this picture and can get same by presenting their name and address at the ticket office of the theatre. Also on the program with this outstanding picture, there are comedies and novelties, all talking.

Thorsby Institute

The calendar for Commencement week is as follows:

Saturday, May 24, 7:30 p. m. Alumni Night, Dining Hall.

Sunday, May 25, 11:00 a. m. Baccalaureate Services in Helen Jenkins Hall, sermon by Rev. Joseph E. Each, pastor Thorsby Congregational church.

Thursday, May 29, 7:45 p. m. Class play, "The Mouse Trap," and other class exercises.

Friday, May 30, 10:30 a. m. Commencement exercises, address by Rev. Russell Johnson pastor North Birmingham Presbyterian church.

Stormy weather is commonly the fate of musical entertainments at the Institute, and the recital of last Saturday night was no exception. The small number who braved the elements, however, felt repaid for their courage. Miss Thoroman's year's work has developed a goodly number of pleasing voices among the students as well as numerous sets of nimble fingers.

The annual Field Day contests were held on Tuesday and Friday afternoons of last week, the races and ball throwing the first day and jumping and "dodge ball" game the second. The Juniors scored the highest number of points, fifty-nine in all, and will be the proud possessors of the silver cup for a year. The highest individual score was twenty-seven points, made by John Adams.

Miss Jenkins entertained the Seniors in her cottage last Friday night. Among the amusing games was the making of costumes with newspapers and tooth-picks. Ice cream and cake were served.

The Freshmen indulged in a picnic supper on the lawn at the Boys Cottage after school Thursday evening. A variety of games and an abundance of good eats combined with perfect weather to make a very happy time. Miss Fairbank acted as chaperone and Mrs. Sutlive and Mr. Sutlive were invited guests.

Misses Daisy, Evie Lee and Odell Rowe were invited to take Sunday dinner with Mrs. J. C. Primm at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Rayburn. There is a long line of girls from our boarding department during the last few years who remember as bright spots in their school life the friendliness of Mrs. Primm and the Rayburns.

JEMISON TRUSTEES MAKE STATEMENT ABOUT AUDIT

Following we publish a letter received from trustees of the Jemison High school in which they make a reply to a letter from L. H. Bean, concerning the audit of the records of the school:

Mr. L. H. Bean, in his article in last week's Union-Banner, requested the Trustees to have the incidental accounts of the Jemison High School examined. For his information we wish to call his attention to the fact that so far as our school is concerned, this has already been done by a State Auditor. The report of this audit is on file in the office of the County Superintendent and if he wishes he or anyone else may see this report. We have found that the Superintendent's books were audited a short time ago also and anyone desiring to see this report may do so. The incidental fees of the Jemison High School are $1.00 for each semester in the Grammar School Grades and $5.00 each for the High School Grades, such fees having been approved by the County Board of Education. This school has grown from an enrollment of one hundred and fifty three to an enrollment of four hundred seventy-two in the past six years and the indications are that the enrollment will exceed five hundred next year. The continued cooperation of the community means the continued success of our school. People, let us cooperate with our County officials in their efforts to keep the Educational standard of Chilton County on an upward trend and elect men to office on their merits.

Heflin, Locke Supporters Call Mass Meeting

forces in every county of the state. Wilkinson declared the forces opposed to the action of the state committee had formed a complete organization in every county. The call is to be circulated by the beat chairman in his beat to obtain as many signatures as possible.

A letter accompanying the call declares: "This is not a new party. It is an organized effort by Democrats of Alabama, some of whom supported Smith and some of whom supported Hoover, to reorganize the party as they have a right to do under the laws of the state."

Reasons for the call are detailed in an extensive preamble. After the Democratic convention at Houston had declared for the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment, it is said, Smith had repudiated the platform by appointing John J. Raskob, a Republican millionaire and director of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, as chairman of the National Democratic Committee. Raskob, the call declares, accepted the post for the express purpose of aiding Smith rid the country of prohibition. The heavy contributions to the association by Raskob and the activities of Tammany leaders are pointed to as proof that the "faction of the Democratic party controlled by Smith, Raskob and Tammany is seeking to destroy the eighteenth amendment and the laws enacted for its enforcement in defiance of the Houston platform and is seeking to convert the Democratic party into a liquor party and to that end recognizes the social and political equality of the white and negro race and condones their intermarriage."

The call then goes on to say the majority of the Alabama State Democratic Executive Committee by its silence has acquiesced in "these gross violations of the Houston platform and invasions of Southern rights and ideals." The action of the committee in prescribing political qualifications for candidates different from political qualifications for voters is attacked as illegal, and the dissenting decision of Justice Thomas of the Supreme Court is cited as not having been questioned by other members of the court.

The majority of the state committee, the call declares, "under the leadership of the wet newspapers of Alabama, who are encouraging in every way defiance of the prohibition laws as well as contempt of our courts," has aligned itself with the faction of the party dominated by Smith, Raskob and Tammany. Because of all these reasons, it is declared, the majority of the state committee "have sought to make themselves the masters, instead of the servants of the Democrats of Alabama and by their acts are guilty of usurpation, oppression and tyranny and thereby have forfeited their right to longer exercise the authority and powers conferred on them by the Democrats of Alabama."

Such authority, it is affirmed, now rests with the rank and file of the Democrats of Alabama. The conclusion reads: "Now, therefore, we, the undersigned white Democratic electors of Alabama and the different counties of the state, composed of men and women who voted for and against Gov. Smith, as well as those who opposed or favored his election, laying aside past differences, standing uncompromisingly for white supremacy, willing to rededicate and reconsecrate ourselves to the great American principles of religious freedom, separation of church and state, and constitutional government, believing that the mandate of the Houston platform as the supreme law of the Democratic party should be obeyed, and that for the peace and security of our homes and firesides the laws enacted for the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment, as well as all of the laws, should be observed by the high as well as the low, and repudiating the recent unlawful, illegal attempt to strangle popular government in Alabama, and the effort to barter the Democratic party to John J. Raskob and Tammany, by impinging upon and denying the right of sovereign white Democratic voters to vote for candidates of their choice, do in behalf of ourselves and other white Democrats of Alabama with like views, hereby call a mass meeting," etc.

The letter accompanying the call explains that the state meeting will now interfere with plans already started in several counties to hold "Jeffersonian primaries."

The call carries photograph of Senator Heflin and Hugh Locke, and the letter says it meets with their approval.

TERRIERS TO PLAY FIRE DEPT. TODAY

Game Scheduled To Begin At Two - Thirty; Much Interest Shown

A baseball game that is certainly creating worlds of interest in Clanton is scheduled to be played this afternoon at two-thirty. The "Terriers," a team made up from the two teams, the Fats and Leans, that played last Thursday afternoon will play against the Clanton Fire Department this afternoon. The game will be played on the diamond at the high school.

In a conversation with a member and organizer of the "Terriers" it was learned that they will probably have as their mascot for this game, little Bunkie Hill, Jr., and something was said about Fagan, the Viper, acting as umpire, but this report was not confirmed on account of the fact that Fagan has a tendency to prevaricate at times.

The fire department team is sitting quiet, as usual, and also as usual will no doubt come out with the real stuff when the game gets started, just as they do when a fire gets underway. In that case the "Terriers" will probably do as the fires do around here, before the onslaught of the firemen. Then again the game may prove victorious for the "Terriers."

The News is herewith giving the line-up of the "Terriers": Pitcher, "Count" Higgins, John Mullins, "Rabbit" Alred; catcher, "Catfish" Eubanks, 1st base, Dewey Rockett, Van Smith, 2nd base, Vic Heard, Coose Neighbors; short stop, George Wyatt, Glenn Moore; 3rd base Webb Parrish, Major Hughes Simpson; center field, Frank Mullins, Jesse Jones; left field "Bull Dog" Kemp, M. Lanle.

The line-up for today's game on the Fireman's team shows some of the old timers, and they perhaps will be able to bring back some of their used-to-be base ball ability. The Firemen's line-up is as follows:

STANFORD'S PLACE OPENS IN THORSBY, ALA., RECENTLY

A place has recently opened in Thorsby, Alabama where the most particular person may stop and enjoy a well prepared lunch, served in a very courteous manner, according to a statement from George Stanford, who has recently opened the Stanford's Place, which is located on the Birmingham highway just on entering Thorsby, on the right going north. This place can easily be spotted by the bright colored lights which decorate the exterior.

Assisting Mr. Stanford, is Mrs. Stanford, who has gained quite a reputation for her delicious barbecue sandwiches, not only here, but in Montgomery, where they have, before coming to Thorsby, operated a similar place. Mr. and Mrs. Stanford stated that they will cater to the younger set who wish to drive to Thorsby for a sandwich, or a light lunch. There is plenty of room to park your car and enjoy yourself.

CLUB BOYS GET JERSEY CALVES HERE LAST SAT.

Animals Distributed Ranged In Price From $84 To $145

Fourteen purchased Jersey calves were distributed to members of the H-H Club of this county, at the office of the County Agent here Saturday. There were sixteen lined up in the display in front of the office, two of which were heifers bought last year for James Dennis and Quinton Kelly. Three of the sixteen were bulls, the others heifers, and all purchased Jerseys.

These animals were shipped here from Tupelo, Miss. Two of the bulls exhibited were from cows that were imported from the Island of Jersey, the original home of the famous Jersey cattle, and were sired by a bull imported in dam, from the same Island. The grand sire of one of the bulls shown here Saturday, is also a great-grand sire of the other two shown, and is named Exina's Sultan, and sold for $35,000 according to official records.

One of the heifers shown is the granddaughter of Exina's Sultan, and all are highly bred Jerseys, ranging in price from $84 to $145.

The names of the animals exhibited here Saturday, with the exception of two that were already owned, were placed in a hat and the selected owners, allowed to draw a name from the hat to decide who got which animal. After the drawing, payment for the animal was arranged through the two banks here, for the boys. The following club boys received animals as follows:

SENIOR III GRADUATING CLASS HAS FINANCIAL BALANCE OVER

Around $800.00 passed through the hands of the Senior III Class of 1930. We are more than glad to announce that they financed everything during this year, and have a balance of $10.50. This has been voted to be used next year in further beautifying the campus. One admirable feature the class did was to take care of the expenses of the Commencement speakers. With the exception of the offertory made Sunday morning at the Methodist Church, they took care of everything. The principal personally thanks again the entire Senior Class for their splendid spirit of loyalty and cooperation during this year's work.

Perhaps he is saving them to tell when he returns to his home. Anyway we hope we will see him at Auburn this summer.

FIRE DOES BIG DAMAGE HERE TUESDAY MORN

The Leader Stands Big Loss In Early Morning Blaze; Offices Damaged

An early morning fire which, according to opinions, originated in one of the offices occupied by Dr. J. E. Gowen, in the Johnson building on Main Street here, caused considerable damage to the entire second floor of the building and to the first floor which is occupied by The Leader, one of Clanton's largest dry goods stores.

The fire was discovered about four-thirty or slightly earlier Tuesday morning, according to reports, and the alarm given. Shortly after the alarm was sounded, the Volunteer Fire Department of Clanton arrived on the scene. Considerable difficulty was encountered by the firemen in getting to the blaze on account of the heavy smoke screen around and through the building. However, they located the place where the fire was largest and after stretching several lines of hose to the fire, they soon had the blaze under control, but still being hindered by the enormous amount of smoke, it was difficult to ascertain whether the fire was extinguished or not.

The law offices of Percy M. Pitts, and those of Lawrence F. Gerald were damaged considerably by the extreme heat and by water, although from indications, the blaze never really reached these offices, which are just across the hall from where the largest blaze occurred. The offices of Dr. J. E. (continued to editorial page)

Mr. Bailey is a highly trained, experienced and very practical poultryman. The meetings will be in the form of round-table discussions, as many questions pertaining to profitable poultry production will be asked those attending the meetings. Make out your list of questions and if Mr. Bailey fails to answer your questions in his talks, then you can ask unanswered questions during the open discussions. Many of the poultrymen of long experience, as Dr. O. C. and Frank Mastin, and numerous others are expected to attend the meetings. Clinic For Cripples At Church Today

The Cripple Clinic will be held today at the Baptist church and will open at nine o'clock this morning. Dr. J. D. Sherill, Orthopedic Specialist, of Birmingham will conduct the clinic. This clinic will be conducted similar to that of last year. The examinations will be absolutely free, and the doctor will suggest what might be done in each case, but no treatment will be given at the clinic.

There are perhaps many children who are victims of infantile paralysis last summer who would like to come to the clinic and see what suggestion Dr. Sherill can make in their case. Probably a brace of some kind or possibly an operation or it is possible just close observation and no particular treatment, will cause them to overcome their affliction. This clinic is absolutely free and will not obligate anyone in any way. It is made possible through the Alabama Cripple Children's Society.

Auburn Says

Spare the poison and spoil the cotton crop.
The home garden is too important to take chances with poor seeds and diseased plants.

A chair that is worn or has poor lines may be transformed into a modern piece of furniture by the use of suitable slip covers.

The per capita consumption of meats including lard, is placed at 136.8 lbs. for 1929 in the United States, while for 1928 it was 138 pounds.

When the daughters of a bull come into production that bull will soon be proved to be either a valuable breeding animal or just so much soup meat.

A recent report shows that about 10 per cent of all persons living on farms are engaged in non-agricultural occupations. Many of them work in surrounding towns or cities.

Back in 1929 the work stock carried on farms amounted to 26,176,000 horses and mules. The January, 1930, estimate places the number at only 18,762,000. This disappearance of 7,674,000 head of work stock from the farms has been accompanied by a valuation decrease of approximately one and one-half billion dollars.

There is an illiteracy of the illiterate, cultural illiteracy, economic illiteracy, religious illiteracy, and social illiteracy, that stands like a wall between us and an increasingly rational and realistic social order.—Glenn Frank.

IN MEMORY OF OUR DARLING

On Friday morning, May 23rd, about 11:30, the Angel of Death visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Timothy Donovan and took from their midst their darling baby who was born May 1st, 1930. He was only sick about 2 or 3 days before his death, but in spite of all that Doctor J. J. DuBose and loving parents and friends could do to save him God in His infinite wisdom saw fit to call him to that celestial city not made with hands. The remains were laid to rest in the Denovan family cemetery about 4 o'clock Friday afternoon with Rev. J. D. Deason officiating. There was a large audience of friends and relatives at the funeral to pay the last tribute of respect to this dear little babe.

Weep not, dear friends and loving parents, for our loss is Heaven's gain. We all know that dear little John R. knew no sin, so let's all strive to meet some sweet day in that Heavenly mansion where there will be no more heartaches and sad farewells.

State Capitol News

The State Department of Education through the Division of School, and Community organization announces plans for a Summer Conference for Parents. This Conference for parents is sponsored by the Alabama Congress of Parents and Teachers, and is to be held at the University of Alabama, on June 25, 26, and 27. This is the first step in an organized program of parental education in which parent-teacher associations over the state may participate during the next school year.

The program of this conference will be divided into two parts: A study of child life, and a school of instruction for parent-teacher workers.

Dr. Gary Cleveland Myers, Head of the Department of Parental Education, Western Reserve University, will give a series of three lectures in which he will discuss the influence of the home environment on the child and on child training. Dr. Myers is eminently fitted to make a definite contribution in the field of parental education. As a psychologist, a lecturer on child psychology, certified consulting psychologist, author and contributor to educational scientific and child welfare journals, Dr. Myers brings a point of view both practical and scientific.

Mrs. Roe will give instruction in the Plans, Purposes, and Organization of Parent-Teacher Associations. She will discuss problems of program making, conducting a meeting, and other parent teacher activities.

Nurse Tells

How CARDUI Helped Her

Mrs. W. A. Cox, a well-known professional nurse, of Burnside, Ky., writes:

"I was in very bad health, and only weighed 110 pounds. I read in the papers about Cardui, and thought I would give it a try-out. After I had taken one bottle, I could see that I was improving. After I had taken it a month or two, I began to gain, and I weigh at present 168, and have weighed that for some time. I am now 65 years old, and can do as much work as the average middle-aged woman can.

"I would advise any woman, who is weakly and in a run-down condition, to try Cardui, but not to expect one bottle to make her well. I take two or three bottles a year, now, and I feel fine."

Chilton County Abstract Co.

M. D. FOSHEE, Manager

A good business man will not buy a farm or any property without first looking it over to see what it is worth. However, some will buy or loan money on land without an abstract.

Isn't it equally as foolish to buy a farm without looking it over as to buy it and not know whether the titles are good or not? Without an abstract you do not know where you are getting the land you look at or not.

Before investing in land in any way have an abstract made and be safe.

“FLYING” HURT BUSINESS

Boston had its Habbitts in the early days, as may be inferred from an order prohibiting a “flying” exhibition in 1757, because it attracted so much attention as to take people from their business.

The Boston Gazette of September 12, 1757, carried a notice saying that “John Childs has flown off most of the highest steeples in Old England, and does intend this day, and two days following, to fly off Dr. Cutler’s church where he hopes to give satisfaction to all spectators.”

Later the same paper stated that the “flight” was satisfactory, it consisting of sliding down a rope sloping from the steeple to a point on the ground about 700 feet away. But the paper added: “As these performances led many people from their business, John Childs is forbid flying any more in the town.”

A MONSTER SKELETON

After being buried for ages in the fossil beds of northeastern Utah, the largest skeleton ever discovered on land now stands in the Carnegie Museum at Pittsburgh, a striking example of the monsters which roamed the earth during the Age of Reptiles, many millions of years ago.

This skeleton is that of a Brontosaurus, of the dinosaur order of reptiles, 100 feet long and 20 feet high. In life the animal weighed perhaps 20 tons. Alongside of it an elephant would seem as small relatively as a dog beside a horse.

The fossil bed from which it was taken is the most extensive deposit of dinosaurian and other reptilian remains ever discovered. It was found in 1919, and the site is under the protection of the National Park Service. More than 200 tons of bones and other material of scientific value have been removed for study and exhibition, with very little duplication of specimens.

According to a statement by the Park Service, it is the belief of scientists that these prehistoric animals were originally imbedded in a sand bar in some ancient river. This sand turned to sandstone and was covered by thousands of feet of other strata of rocks, the whole later having been forced into an upright position by a great volcanic upheaval, which left the fossil bed exposed on a mountain top.

Through the patient labors of scientists who are continually exploring among such records preserved in the rocks, as well as among the ruins of ancient civilization, salient facts in the world’s history which were totally unknown a few years ago are being brought to light.

Budgeting Calories by Jane Rogers

Thrifty Housewife Knows Trick of Balancing the Diet to Obtain Maximum of Food Calories

THE housewife of today is much more likely to budget her expenses than the bride of fifty years ago. In those days it was only necessary to step into the garden and pluck a generous helping of fresh vegetables for the evening meal or stop by the smoke-house and procure a sizeable ham at a minimum of cost.

Today, the problem centers around making so many dollars purchase so many calories of food, so many articles of clothing and on through the whole line of living expenses.

Selection of foods is one of the most important considerations in budget making. Each member of the family needs a certain number of calories per day—varying according to the amount of manual work or labor indulged in and unless the housewife knows a little about the caloric value of foods there is great danger that her meals will be lacking in some of the most important elements which make up the well balanced diet.

With a market list showing prices and a calorie list, the housewife can work out a very interesting little problem in economical buying. A pound of butter contains 3600 calories and at the average price of fifty cents a pound it is possible to obtain 72 calories for one cent. A pound of bacon at fifty-cents will furnish 51 calories for each cent; roast beef at thirty-five cents will furnish 27; macaroni at fifteen cents will give 110 while sugar at an average price of six cents a pound will furnish no less than 310 calories for each cent spent. Because of the great number of calories it contains, sugar is one of the cheapest of all foods in addition to being one of the most valuable. It furnishes fuel which keeps the body engine burning, supplies much needed energy and its importance as a sweetener and flavorer, especially when used in the cooking of fresh or canned vegetables is universally recognized. A dash of sugar and a pinch of salt have become twentieth century household words.

Of course no one food can be used to the great exclusion of others even though it provides enough calories to meet the average demand but the housewife soon learns the and other little tricks that eventually lead to the preparation of well balanced and at the same time economical meals.

“In Spite of the Devil”

Historic Stream Sees Engineering Feat

SPUYTEN DUYVIL, the brackish and frequently turbulent body of water separating Manhattan from the mainland, which was the setting for one of the best legends of the early Dutch colonists, was the scene a few days ago of an engineering feat that is attracting widespread interest.

Something of the same spirit of determination which fired the hapless Dutch trumpeter, central figure in this legend, from whose exploit Spuyten Duyvil got its name, was displayed by the engineers who directed this operation.

Trumpeter Drowned According to the story which has survived since the days when New York was the village known as “New Amsterdam,” upon the sighting of the hostile British fleet entering the harbor, this trumpeter was dispatched to warn and summon the upland farmers to the defense of the settlement.

Reaching the stream, he found its waters so rough that no one would undertake to ferry him across. Whereupon he is reputed to have exclaimed that he would “cross ‘in spite of the devil,’” and plunging into the water, was drowned in a vain attempt to swim to the opposite bank.

Choose Old Metal

The material that finally provided the railroad engineers with the means for successful solution of their problem was one that was well known, and prized for

Giant derricks on a fleet of barges lowered the great cluster of wrought iron piping into the river.

Delicate Operation

Assembled into lengths of 650 feet, the thirty-six ducts were yoked together with wrought iron bolts in four layers of nine lengths to the row. Then, filled with oil to ease the operation of drawing the power lines through, the piping was placed on barges which brought the many-ton load into position over a previously dredged trench. Bent to conform to the bottom of the stream, the great bundle of piping was then lowered under the supervision of a diver who guided the operations by signals from the under-water trench.

Since traffic on the canal had to be suspended, a Sunday was chosen for the operation, which was completed by the Merritt, Chapman and Scott Corporation in less than a day.

Better Cattle For Chilton County

The bringing to Chilton County of purebred cattle is just another progressive step forward. For many years, the farmers of this county, with the exception of a few foresighted men who have been raising purebred animals, have been making out with ordinary cattle on their farms and were not really making any effort to improve their stock. With purebred cattle being distributed over the county as it is now being done through the efforts of the Chilton County Farm Bureau, there can be but one object in this, and that is to improve the cattle in Chilton County. There is no doubt that it will take several years for this imported cattle to inter-breed with the cattle already here, but even at that, with the proper steps taken, it is a fact that better cattle will be the result.

Several of the imported purebred animals were distributed to various 4-H Club boys here last Saturday by C. E. Stapp, County Agent, who is using his ability to bring about a county of organized farmers. The idea of turning these animals over to club boys of the county is perhaps a very good step, provided care is taken in the selection of the future owner of the animal. It will have a tendency to cause the future farmers of Chilton County to be better able to appreciate a purebred and profitable animal, instead of starting off with scrub cattle to become profitable farmers.

Some persons may have some criticisms to make concerning the amount of money paid for such purebred cattle. This item, of course, should be given some consideration but should not stand in the way of a step to bring to the farmers of Chilton County a way to improve their cattle, and it can not be said that our farmers can boast of owning a sufficient number of purebred animals.

“ROUND TOWN”

---by Doug

Opinions expressed in this column by this writer have no connection with the general policies of this paper, being wholly those of the writer, in the manner they are written.

“Every man will have his own criterion in forming his judgment of others. I depend very much on the effect of affliction. I consider how a man comes out of the furnace; gold will lie for a month in the furnace without losing a grain.”

—Richard Cecil.

What has become of the Merchants Organization of Clanton? Is it still on the go? It started off with a great big bang, something like a firecracker. And maybe it is just more proof that the merchants and business men of Clanton have not yet acquired the art of co-operating. “Co” means to get together and “operate” means to work, in case you didn’t know. It seems they can’t even agree to all closing on Thursday afternoons during the summer months. One or two appear to be afraid they might miss something—never thinking that their clerks would like an afternoon off, during the summer, without having to ask for it.

The editor has made me make a statement about opinions expressed in this column, so I have. It is in the heading of the column, and I hope it is clear.

Someone wanted to know if I was paid for writing this column of nonsense. Well, I hope they don’t think I can use it for food—clothes, and build a house with it.

And now, the editor received a phone call the other day, and a sweet little voice asked him if he could tell her how to improve herself. I think he almost swallowed the telephone right on the spot. It was just another case where he was accused of being the author of this column. Finally he collected his senses enough to tell the young lady on the phone that he would try to get me to throw some light on the subject this week. But I am in no mood to do that, so the best answer I can give is that I will be more than glad to give the curious young lady a private and personal interview on request.

A fellow signing as “The Kool Knight” writes in and suggests I comment on the indifference of the young ladies of Clanton. Listen, “Kool Knight,” if some girl has given you the ozone, I’m sorry. Perhaps your name suits you too well. Why not change it to “Hot Tamale” and live up to it.

Auburn, Ala., May 27.—Club girls from 4-H clubs in 42 Alabama counties today began their fifteenth annual short course here which will continue through Saturday. The club workers, numbering 168, were selected from among 12,032 Alabama club girls for the short course because of high achievement in their work. Proper health habits will be emphasized in the program, Miss Fleming said. Lectures and lantern slides demonstrating posture, personal hygiene, exercise through recreation, and foods and clothing for health will be the subjects presented.

From the participants in the health contest the state champion is to be selected. The county champions will be judged by a committee of which Dr. A. H. Graham, state board of health, is chairman.

Six home demonstration agents are assisting the state staff in conducting the course. They are Mrs. Florence G. Farish, Calhoun county; Miss Lucile Braswell, Colbert county; Miss Essie Hester, Autauga; Miss Mary Olive Carnley, Elmore; Miss Margaret Garrett, Baldwin; Miss Lavada Curtis, Dale; Miss Clara Nale and Miss Martha Haupt, Greene, and Mrs. W. Students of The Jemison High School Organize “Beta Club”

At the beginning of the past school term the demerit system was instituted in the Jemison High School. This gave each teacher in the Junior and Senior High Schools a chance to grade each student coming to her room on deportment, this being an advantage over the method formerly used. Many students were very careful to do only that which was right. The above students have not received over ten demerits the entire year, while front row did not receive any. These students organized themselves into a club, that they might have a part in the betterment of the school. The name selected for the club was “the Beta Club.” Officers elected were as follows: Tommie Lee Sims, President; Irene Dennis, vice president; Ruby Merchant, secretary and treasurer. It is hoped that these charter members will keep their good record and many other students may become members of the organization next year.

The News was informed that the place which is generally known as the Reynolds dance hall, located on the Birmingham highway north of Clanton, will open on next Wednesday night, June 4th, with a dance.

It was also stated that a string orchestra will furnish the music for the dance, and everyone is invited to come.

Fire Does Big Damage

Gowan, dentist, was probably the worst damaged, as the walls were practically burned through in some places, while the floor burned through allowing the fire to go down into the dry goods store below, owned by M. Lande, and doing much damage there to stock and fixtures before it was extinguished, judging from indications.

The damage to the building alone, which is the property of Dr. Napoleon S. Johnson, has been estimated at about $5,000, while the damage to the offices and fixtures on the second floor will run into the thousands. The damage to the stock of goods in The Leader will probably run into thousands of dollars, although no estimate could be determined at the time of this writing. It was stated that practically the entire large stock of the store was damaged by either the fire or water. No damage was done to adjoining buildings as the flames were kept within the Johnson building by the firemen, who were complimented on their quick work in getting control of the blaze before it had time to spread. The fire is said to have been first discovered by Herschel Gore, who was on duty at Dief’s Service Station.

J. R. BAXTER, JR., WILL ATTEND
COUNTY SINGING CONVENTION

It will be interesting news to the singers and music lovers of Chilton County to learn that Prof. J. R. Baxter, Jr., of the Stamps-Baxter Music Company of Chattanooga, Tenn., has agreed to attend the Chilton County Singing Convention to meet at Jemison the first Sunday in July.

In a letter written to Jesse Baker Prof. Baxter has the following to say: “I will promise to be with you at Jemison if nothing unforeseen happens. I see no reason now why I can’t be there, and unless sickness or something turns up that I know nothing of I will be there. Mrs. Baxter and some others will be with us, and I will write to some of my friends who live near enough and will try to get them to come.”

Prof. Baxter is one of the foremost singers, writers and publishers of sacred music in the South, and the county singing convention feels very fortunate in getting him and Mrs. Baxter to agree to meet with us. We feel sure that the convention at Jemison is going to be the greatest success of any convention ever held in the county.

As announced through the paper last week, Prof. H. C. Collins, formerly of this county and Coosa, but now of Cairo, Ga., has promised to attend. A special invitation has been extended to Prof. John M. Dye of Birmingham, as well as all the other leading singers of the state. It is hoped to have the Stamps Quartette with us, but that is not certain yet. However, there will be some quartet bands present and you may rest assured of that.

ALA. FARMERS POOLED 161,444 BALES OF COTTON

Montgomery, Ala., May 29.—Allen Northington, general manager of the Alabama Farm Bureau Cotton Association, yesterday afternoon released statistics showing that 9829 Alabama farmers this year pooled 161,444 bales of cotton with their cooperative cotton association with headquarters in Montgomery.

Mails a county farmers led by pooling 8350, Autauga came second with 7274 bales and Marengo third with 7101 bales. Mr. Northington said that it is of interest to note that Autauga county farmers placed one-half of their entire cotton crop in the Association. Other counties placed a high percentage.

The statistics released by Mr. Northington shows that the farmers in each county of the state pooled the following number of bales:

Autauga 7274, Baldwin 9, Barbour 2807, Bibb 1131, Blount 4350, Bullock 2363, Butler 3804, Calhoun 1178, Chambers 3425, Cherokee 247, Chilton 1762, Choctaw 1207, Clarke, 2167, Clay 563, Cleburne 229, Coffee 1739, Colbert 2274, Conecuh, 2162, Coosa-Tallapoosa 677, Covington 2306, Crenshaw 733, Cullman 4226, Dale 2155, Dallas 4742, DeKalb 1639, Elmore 4601, Escambia 781, Etowah 932, Fayette 1842, Franklin 4596, Geneva 3557, Greene 3054, Hale 5378, Henry 3738, Houston 3746, Jackson 1885, Jefferson 242, Lamar 1467, Lauderdale 4300, Lawrence 2331, Lee 1643, Limestone 3185, Lowndes 2265, Macon 1128, Madison 8258, Marengo 7191, Marion 1842, Marshall 3672, Mobile 29, Montgomery 2856, Monroe 2495, Morgan 1278, Perry 2272, Pickens 575, Pike 2657, Escambia 781, Etowah 932, Fayette 1842, Franklin 4596, Geneva 3557, Greene 3054, Hale 5378, Henry 3738, Houston 3746, Jackson 1885, Jefferson 242, Lamar 1467, Lauderdale 4300, Lawrence 2331, Lee 1643, Limestone 3185, Lowndes 2265, Macon 1128, Madison 8258, Marengo 7191, Marion 1842, Marshall 3672, Mobile 29, Montgomery 2856, Monroe 2495, Morgan 1278, Perry 2272, Pickens 575, Pike 2657, Russell 1226, Shelby 807, Sumter 3864, Talladega 3379, Tallapoosa 1594, Tuscaloosa 1680, Walker 308, Washington 437, Wilcox 4025, and Winston 694.

Thousands Of Car- loads Go North

The Alabama strawberry season is about at an end. The crop is limited because of cold nights and a lack of rain. On the other hand, prices have been reasonably good, especially for the best quality.

To date of May 22, 1924 carloads of potatoes have left Alabama for northern markets. This compares with a total of 1,541 carloads for last year. The movement for 1930 will doubtless run well over 2,000 carloads. The quality and price have been satisfactory.

To date of May 22, a total of 184 cars of cucumbers had been shipped from the Gulf Coast. These have brought from $1.50 to $2.50 per bushel hamper, in various northern cities.

Twenty-five carloads of cabbage left Alabama on May 21. Prices ranged from $3.50 to $5.50 per crate of 100 pounds net.

PEOPLE ARE SO CARELESS

Last year, writes a Southern landholder whose property is thick with timber, campers twice set our place afire. Birds, flowers, and animals were decimated unbelievably.

What a tribute to the American camper! It it were an isolated instance it would be bad enough, and to spare. But it is not. Last year saw hundreds of forest fires in the South, started by campers; destroying thousands of acres of valuable timber, charring tens of thousands of mating and brooding birds, wiping out herds of small furred inhabitants of the woods, marring for decades great stretches of timber unsurpassed for sheer loveliness.

Why? Because people are careless. Simply that.

Because the average vacationist, thru some mysterious inner change from the considerate citizen he is at home, utterly disregards the property rights of those people who live in the country through which he passes. Because he takes not only an economic and physical but also a mental vacation.

He simple-mindedly throws his cigarettes and cigars into the dry grass of roadside ditches and starts the worst kind of fires. He lights his camp fires on the tops of hills, and then leaves them burning there, where winds can, and too often do, spread the flames in every direction. Being on his "vacation," and therefore unable to exert any effort other than for brief walking and eating, he refuses to bare the ground on which he builds his fires; and so ignites thick carpets of leaves and pine needles, leaving them to smolder, to flame, and to start more forest fires.

It was estimated in 1928 that more than thirty million acres of Southern timber land had been laid waste by fires up to that time. The natural causes of such fires are few, and their toll comparatively inconsiderate. The chief—almost the sole—offender is the camper.

The approaching season will no doubt bring its annual trek of Southern and other tourists to these mountains and forests, for there could be no pleasanter places in which to while away the hot days. It is most earnestly to be hoped that these visitors will bring with them enough common sense not to destroy that which they find and enjoy here.

Henry Clayton of Chicago pleaded for a quick trial of the speeding charge against him as he was to be arrested an hour. He rushed out.

Alabama Farmers Are Organizing

Montgomery, Ala., May 29.—Since the Federal Government has placed its approval upon farmers organizing and has made cooperative marketing a national policy, the interest in farm organization among Alabama farmers has increased by leaps and bounds and today 75 per cent of the farmers of the state are joining their farm organization when told of the work that the Federal Farm Board is doing through cooperative marketing to assist farmers in solving their problems.

This was revealed Tuesday by Edward A. O'Neal, president of the Alabama Farm Bureau Federation, when he reported that within the past six months over 12,000 farmers have become members of the farm bureau. He stated that a drive for membership will be conducted in a few Alabama counties within the next few weeks. Last week, two solicitors, S. B. Mullins and J. D. Giles, worked in Perry County and got over 300 of the most progressive farmers of the county to join their county farm bureau. These two men have reported that over 75 per cent of the farmers of the county called upon became members.

This report was confirmed by J. P. Robinson, county agent, who works with the farmers and the farm bureau of the county in an educational way. Mr. Robinson reported that he can make his work much more effective by working with an organization of farmers than he can by working with individuals.

A CALAMITY CRY

In a recent sermon, a New Jersey pastor made a statement that sounds quite familiar, as follows:

"There is lawlessness everywhere. Children no longer obey their parents. It is evident that the end of the age is at hand."

Then the pastor told his congregation that the words were not original with him, not even an utterance of the present day. They were translated from an inscription on a brick found in the ruins of ancient Assyria, dating centuries before the time of the patriarch Abraham.

Records which have been preserved during all periods of recorded history give evidence of similar conditions existing in the world. Sometimes an improvement is noted; again lawlessness and violence become more prevalent than ever.

While present day conditions are bad enough, it seems that on the whole they are better than in the past. There is more thought given to the relief of suffering, to the betterment of industrial conditions, to mutual helpfulness and like matters of benefit to humanity than in former times.

Although the world war gave civilization a severe set-back in some respects, we must remember that war has marked the history of every generation of mankind. The same is true of lawlessness, oppression and every other manifestation of immorality. These will always exist in greater or less degree, so long as good and evil struggle for mastery in the hearts and minds of men.

Large Pores And Blackheads Are Easily Prevented Or Remedied

BLACKHEADS make any skin look muddy. Also, when pores are clogged with oil and dust, they form an ideal lodging place for bacteria. Although some germs seem comparatively harmless, many others are quite harmful, and will irritate a sensitive skin. These irritations may be only occasional pimples, or they may result in some serious skin disease.

The best way to prevent blackheads and enlarged pores is to keep your skin perfectly clean. To do this, at least once daily smooth cleansing cream up over your face, and then with soft cleansing tissues gently wipe off the cream. Next, especially if your skin is inclined to be oily, wash your face with warm water and a mild soap. And last, always close your pores with a mild astringent. If you give your face this simple treatment every day, your pores will not enlarge, and blackheads and pimples will have less chance to form.

Many women are troubled with oiliness, enlarged pores or blackheads that appear only in certain parts of the face. The nose seems to be the greatest offender. This is quite natural, because oil glands on the nose are quite large and plentiful. If you are bothered with blackheads and enlarged pores, or your skin seems rather oily, I would suggest the frequent use of a mild astringent. And each time before you powder, pat over your nose a piece of cotton saturated with the astringent. Putting layers of powder on top of each other without first cleansing and contracting your pores only increases blackheads and enlarged pores, and does not hide them.

If enlarged pores or blackheads are especially troublesome, apply pore cream after your nightly cleansing to those parts of your face that seem to need it most. Pore cream is easy and pleasant to use. Leave it on all night, and it will contract your pores gently while you sleep.

You may ask, "After I have left pore cream on all night, how shall I remove it in the morning?" I think you will find, unless you have applied a bit too much, that your skin has absorbed nearly all the pore cream. In the morning, cleanse your face with cleansing cream, or if you like, warm water and soap will wash away any surplus pore cream. If you are in a hurry, hastily sponge off your face with a freshening skin tonic.

Do not expect blackheads to go away overnight. They have formed slowly, and the only safe way to get rid of them is to use preparations which will act gradually. And of course, do not fuss with your face. Unless your finger tips have been sterilized, you simply will carry more bacteria to your tiny skin pores.

With most skilled cooks, caramel is a favorite flavoring agent for many meat sauces and soups. Here's a quick and easy way to make it. Melt a cup of granulated sugar slowly in a pan, and cook until dark brown, being careful to avoid scorching. Pour in a cup of boiling water and cook slowly until a thick syrup is formed. The caramel may be kept indefinitely in a covered glass jar.

Western Dairy Herd Wins High Yield Crown

John Coppini and Bull Whose Daughters Have Completed Record Production

Breaking all established records for average butterfat production by Jersey herds tested for the Herd Improvement Registry of the American Jersey Cattle Club, John Coppini's herd of nineteen purebred Jersey cows at Ferndale, California, yielded an average of 567.80 lbs. of butterfat, the equivalent of 709 lbs. of butter, per cow during the twelve months of 1929. This exceptional average butterfat yield was made on twice a day milking and during the year the cows received only the usual care given a profitable dairy herd.

There were only two mature cows in the herd during the time of the test. Six of the herd were heifers with first calf. During the entire year an average of thirteen cows were in milk, and nine were milked throughout the test. Of these nine cows, one, a senior 4-year-old, yielded 720.05 lbs. of butterfat, and three others produced more than 625 lbs. of butterfat.

Cream checks received by Mr. Coppini showed an average gross income for the cows in milk of $25 per cow per month, or $300 per year. Mr. Coppini was paid $4,190.65 for the total of 7,674.3 lbs. of butterfat sold during the year, and in addition his income from the herd was increased by the sale of a number of calves.

During the thirteen years in which Mr. Coppini has been carrying on production testing profit has never been sacrificed to secure spectacular production records. Practical feeding methods are used and Mr. Coppini has always insisted that all cows in his herd pay a good profit above maintenance cost. Every cow is tested and an accurate record kept of her performance. Very creditable production records have been completed by individuals in the herd and at the present time cows tested by Mr. Coppini hold five of the California championships for the different age classes. This excellent progress has not been due to any fortunate circumstances but to carefully planned breeding and testing work extending over a number of years.

One noted foundation cow owned by Mr. Coppini, Noble's Sayda Polo, was twice living long distance champion of the Jersey breed and during her ten completed production tests yielded a total of 6,307.51 lbs. of butterfat, the equivalent of 7,884 lbs., or almost four tons of butter, and 91,916 lbs. of milk. All except one of Mr. Coppini's present herd of nineteen high producing cows are descendants of this celebrated cow, and ten were sired by Noble's Sayda Polo's Son, Silver Medal bull now head of Mr. Coppini's herd.

Mr. Coppini's success as a Jersey breeder and a dairyman has been so closely related to the achievements of Noble's Sayda Polo that when this cow died at the age of fifteen years in 1929, her grave was made a commanding position on his ranch and marked with a permanent headstone to carry thru the years the record of her achievements.

It has been almost a quarter of a century since Mr. Coppini started into the Jersey business with three purebred yearling heifers and modest financial assets. He is now recognized as one of the leading Jersey breeders and dairymen of the United States and is owner of a fifteen-acre ranch with a modern home and all the barns and equipment necessary for an efficient dairy plant. He is active in all movements pertaining to the development of dairying in California, and in 1928, he represented California at the World Dairy Congress in London, England. At the present time he is a director of the American Jersey Cattle Club, the National organization of Jersey breeders.

HORTON WALKER TO COACH ATHLETICS IN C. C. H. S. AGAIN

It is with pleasure we announce that Mr. T. H. Walker will be head coach and director of high school athletics in Chilton County High another year. It will be recalled that Mr. Walker was a four-letter man at Bibb County High at Centerville where he graduated in 1924. After graduating Mr. Walker entered the University of Alabama taking an A. B. Degree from that institution in June, 1928. Since that time he has been more or less connected with high school athletics in an advisory as well as directly coaching and working with young men. Mr. Walker holds two special certificates received while under Coach Wade.

Horton Walker is one of the cleanest men the writer knows of in athletics. He is absolutely impartial in any situation. During the past year as a member of Chilton County High School Faculty, he has won the utmost faith and confidence of every boy and girl in this school. This goes without fear of contradiction. This will be substantiated by the boys and girls representing this school. We are glad to have one at the head of our athletic association who has this faith and confidence in the student-body as a whole.

FIREMEN HONORED WITH BIG BANQUET LAST WEEK

The members of the Volunteer Fire Department of Clanton were royally entertained on Wednesday night of last week when they were treated to a stag dinner by Mayor Eric Hart.

Tables were arranged in the office of the city clerk, and along with the firemen, the entire city force was invited, including members of the town council.

During the dinner Mayor Hart spoke to the firemen, commending them for the interest and care being taken in their work, and also for the work they have done during recent fires here. Several of the firemen responded to the Mayor's talk, among whom were Macey Jones, chief of the department, Ruphus Brown, "Red" Sherrod, and Arthur Broadhead. The dinner was prepared by the Dixie Cafe.

ISABELLA SCHOOL CLOSES A SUCCESSFUL YEAR

The Isabella school has had its best year in its history. Fifteen boys and girls received their diplomas last Monday night. Two others, Myrtle Durbin and Arberry Williams, were in the Senior class, but did not graduate. They were in Senior I last year and decided to take extra work and meet all the requirements for graduation except Senior III English. They did the work in a highly creditable manner. They plan to work off this subject in the summer and get their diplomas next year.

The commencement exercises were fine, and the Senior play and the class exercises were pronounced to be the best they have ever had. The sermon by Dr. Childs was as good as anyone ever heard anywhere and the baccalaureate address by Dr. Hobbs was fine indeed.

It is predicted that there is no way of keeping a school like this down, if revenue can be provided for its maintenance. And why shouldn't it? A school that serves the educational needs of such an excellent class of citizens?

The prospects for next year are flattering. They have as good a faculty as can be had in Chilton county, everyone of whom will attend summer school in the various colleges and University of the state.

Worth Remembering!

Because it will save you money. When you buy at the A & P Stores you do not have to give 5c of every dollar for profit, nor 4c—not even 3c. A & P, unlike other food store systems, deliberately cuts its profits to less than 2 1/2c on a dollar.

THANKS!

We wish to express our thanks to the fire chief and his comrades for their valiant work in keeping down further loss in the fire at our store Tuesday morning; also to express our sympathy for the others who suffered losses in this fire.

We are grateful to our many friends who have offered their sympathy and assistance in this heavy loss.

To those who have patronized our business in the past we shall ever be grateful. We will be back in business just as soon as possible, and will appreciate the continued friendship of our former customers.

IT WILL PAY YOU TO USE OUR

Nitrogen Potash Top Dresser

In demonstrations conducted during the past 2 years 74 Alabama farmers used approximately 3 times as much potash as they had been using to cotton. This extra potash was used in addition to the regular fertilizer application. The return was $4.06 for each $1.00 invested in extra potash. In most cases the extra potash was used as a top-dressing. Potash keeps down diseases, reduces shedding to a minimum and makes bigger bolls. Our nitrogen-potash top-dresser contains nitrogen and potash in the combination that has proven very profitable in Alabama.

Come in and let us explain this top-dresser more fully to you

HODGES STORE DAMAGED BY FIRE TUESDAY

Fire Department Answers
3rd Call In Two Weeks; Slight Damage

Answering their third call in the past two weeks the volunteer fire department was summoned to the store of W. Z. Hodges early last Tuesday morning.

The alarm was sounded about one o'clock a. m. and although the firemen were hindered in their efforts by a dense smoke coming from the building, they soon had the blaze extinguished, as it had gained only a small headway when discovered. Reports state that the fire was discovered by Night Officer Stanton, who was making his rounds at that time.

Judging from the appearances the fire was confined to the rear of the store. The intense heat, with the heavy smoke did some damage to the entire store and fixtures. No estimate of the damage done was given out at the time of this writing.

The members of the volunteer fire department are getting some real training now in Clanton, as they have been put up against fires that have occurred in various ways. The News was not able to secure any information as to how the fire originated, at this time.

ERROR MADE LAST WEEK ABOUT FIRE ORIGIN

In giving an account of the fire which did considerable damage to the law offices of Lawrence F. Gerald, Percy M. Pitts, The Leader, and the dental offices of Dr. J. E. Gowan, last week, the News stated that according to opinions, the fire originated in one of the rooms occupied by Dr. Gowan.

On further investigation we found that the place where the fire did the most burning and probably started, was in a vacant room that adjoins on the rear of those occupied by Dr. Gowan. The blaze burned through the partition between the vacant room and Dr. Gowan's office, and down through the floor into the store of The Leader.

The stock of The Leader was transferred to the building formerly occupied by the Clanton Produce Co., near the post office, until repairs can be made on the damaged building.

'TO THE CURB' ON SOUNDING OF FIRE SIREN

Autoists And Pedestrians Are Given Timely Suggestion
By Fire Chief

A very timely suggestion and something of a warning of precaution has been issued by Macy Jones, fire chief, to autoists and pedestrians of Clanton, stating that they should be more careful when they hear the fire alarm go off.

"At the sound of the alarm," Chief Jones stated, "it means that the streets are to be opened for complete right-of-way for the fire truck." The best rule to follow in this case is to pull to the side of the street and stop your car (cont. to back page—first section)

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By GRANT DIXON

Buried Treasure
A sure sign of spring is a new story about buried treasure. Simon Lake, veteran inventor of undersea apparatus, comes forth with the announcement that he is going to search Long Island sound, in the vicinity of Hell Gate, for $4,000,000 in gold that was to have paid off the British army during the Revolutionary war. When Lake was a boy a certain Captain Thomas looked up war records and learned that a British pay ship wrecked itself on Pot Rock in Hell Gate in 1783. Thomas spent a fortune trying to salvage the gold some forty years ago, but he never found a trace of the British ship.

Skyscraper Mice
In recent weeks several tremendous skyscrapers have been thrown open in the Grand Central zone, and from some of the office space renters I have found that the chief trouble with a new 50-story building is mice. Plain, kitchen-and-basement variety mice. It takes several weeks of work to make a newly opened building safe for stenographers. The stenographers, resourceful girls that they are, have evolved a neat method of catching office mice. At closing time a girl empties the paper from a wastebasket and places in the receptacle a piece of cheese. The basket is placed near a chair, so that an ambitious mouse may clamber up a rung and peer into it. The mouse spies the cheese, and hops into the basket—and there it is. It can't climb up the steel sides.

Autographs Up to Date
I ran up against a new fad the other day—or at least it was new to me. I had occasion to visit an aviator friend who was in a bad smushup and had been for weeks in a plaster cast. When I was about to leave, he drew forth a fountain pen and said: "Your John Henry, please."
"What do you mean?" I asked, puzzled.
"Sign here, on this cast," he answered. "It's my autograph album."
I found the names of dozens of visitors written on the plaster cast. Among them were the names of Clarence Chamberlin and others known to fame.
"I'll save this cast to remind me of the pleasant part of hospital life," said the sufferer.
Not a bad philosophy, that.

"Willy-Nilly" Bugaboo of English Airmen

London.—Have you heard of the "willy-nilly"? It is no cousin of "Penny-Ante."

Nor is it a catch-question or ask me another, but a phenomenon sometimes encountered by airplane pilots when flying over the Mediterranean. It is a storm, a true freak of nature. The dictionary defines "willy-nilly" as uncertain. Ask a pilot what his definition is and he is most likely to reply "It's awful!"

It can best be described as an area of about 400 yards long and 100 yards wide of thick, dense rain, but rain which ascends in place of descending. It is really a close relative of a water spout, being blown or sucked up from the surface of the sea.

Severe "willy-nillys" may even contain seaweed and small pieces of wreckage. One of these odd storms, thus far encountered only over the Mediterranean, may ascend to a height of 300 or 400 feet.

Law Keeps Out United States Soldier

Detroit.—James Cooper Harper, who for seven years has worn the uniform of the United States army, is now non-desiring the peculiarities of nations. Disclaimed by the United States and facing deportation by Canada, he wonders what sort of a welcome would await him in his native hills of Scotland. The rules of immigration authorities work in a mysterious way and therein lie all of Harper's troubles. He came to Canada from Scotland in 1923 and two weeks later crossed to Buffalo, where he enlisted in the Fourteenth United States Infantry. He served three years in Panama, returned, was honorably discharged and immediately re-enlisted.

On March 18 Harper was stationed at Fort Wayne awaiting transfer to service in China and he decided he would like one more look at British soil. Wearing his uniform he crossed to Windsor and passed two hours there. On his way back his feet found the pitfall that had awaited him for seven years. The United States immigration officers learned his story and sent him back to Canada. They told Canadian officers that he should be returned to Scotland.

A Canadian board of inquiry decided, in consideration of the oath he took when he entered the United States army, that Harper should be returned to the United States. In the meantime this Scotch-American soldier is a prisoner, waiting for such justice as may be meted out to him. He has decided that he doesn't want to return to the United States if the United States doesn't want him. He has offered to enlist in the Canadian army, but the suggestion was not warmly received.

There are no wars now, there is no "thin red line" of heroes, and the services of a good soldier are now going begging.

MAKING LIFE TOO EASY

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

Summer almost raised a riot in our neighborhood a few years ago because of the treatment of his young son who had reached the mature age of four and who Summer thought should have gained some respect for the law and order of the family. The road in front of the Summer house was not paved.

In the spring the mud on the thoroughfare was well high bottomless, and Summer had warned his son to keep to the walk. But the young American was full of adventure, and wandering out into the street, mired in the soft loam and began calling lustily for help. Summer sitting on his front porch saw his son struggling to extricate himself from the mud, but he gave no aid.

"He has gotten himself into the difficulty," he explained, "he may get out the best way he can. It isn't a good thing to make life too easy."

Seeing that he was left to his own devices, the boy stopped crying and pulled himself out of the mire. He was taught a good lesson, but the neighbors were scandalized at the cruelty of the unsympathetic parent.

If I should be asked to give an opinion as to what is the matter with the young people of today it would be that life is being made too easy for many of them. They are asked to make no sacrifices, they come up against no real hardships, they know little about early rising and hard work and doing without things. Their pathway is carefully smoothed by father and mother and grandmother and maiden aunts. Every stone is removed from their path, and the activities of life are all graded down to a dead level.

"I don't want my son to go through what I went through," father explains. "We want John to have every advantage," mother announces, and so the boy has an easy road, and turns out too often soft and selfish and easily discouraged when he comes up against difficulty.

We have a rule at the institution where I do business that students may not drive automobiles excepting in cases of real necessity. Simon came to see me last year concerning his son, a lazy hulk who was just barely passing his work.

"Why should he have the car?" I asked.

"Well, he lives so far away from the campus," he explained, "and he is sometimes late to class from not getting up in time."

"How far?" I inquired.

"Oh, four or five blocks."

I shook my head. He thought a minute and then seemed resigned to his refusal.

"Well, he can call a taxicab if he doesn't feel like walking that far," he said. He was making it pretty easy, I thought.

Our young people have too many fur coats, too many silk stockings, too soft beds to lie on. They shy too often from hardship and things that are difficult and unpleasant. Parents forget that they grow strong only from struggle and the life that is made too easy is generally weak and inefficient.

Planning for Record Skyscraper

Albany, N. Y.—Frank Hofelch, twenty, young Rensselaer concrete contractor, who will receive $20,000 at his marriage, is in the market for a bride—preferably a young, vivacious brunette.

This was revealed when Hofelch announced to his friends he had broken off his acquaintance with "the only girl"—the girl that up to a month ago he planned to give the benefit of his money.

They had quarreled, but about what, Hofelch was reluctant to say.

It all started back in 1923 when he was a corporal in the Tenth Infantry, New York National Guard, at Camp Smith, Peekskill. John Sommers, rich New York real estate broker, stopped his car near Corporal Hofelch and a companion at a spring by the roadside. Sommers left his car and knelt to drink.

Suddenly a rattlesnake, disturbed from his sun bath, struck at Sommers and bit him on the wrist.

With his military training, Corporal Hofelch was able to apply first aid.

He cut the wound, sucked the poison from the man's arm and applied a tourniquet. Sommers' life was saved. Hofelch thought nothing more of the incident until June, 1929, when he was notified by a New York lawyer that he had been bequeathed $20,000, which he would receive when he married.

Sommers, a bachelor himself, had asked Corporal Hofelch when he intended to marry, after his rescue. Hofelch had told him some day.

Hofelch had "one best girl" until February of this year, when they "broke off" because of what he terms a childish dispute.

The fortunate girl who will share his $20,000, he said, may be either a blond or brunette, preferably a brunette, but she must be of the vivacious type.

The annual pay roll in Texas of the common carrier bus and truck industry totals about $20,000,000.

DIPPING INTO SCIENCE

The Formation of Coal
When we burn wood in such a manner that little air gets to it, we have an almost all-carbon product—charcoal. Exactly in this way did mother nature produce our coal. Millions of years' accumulations of leaves and vegetable matter and the resulting weight, together with the earth's heat, turned this matter into coal. However, more gas is retained in coal than in charcoal.

Scores 100%

EMMA Lee Stepp is seven years old and weighs 68 pounds. "Every time she has been in a contest," says her mother, Mrs. E. Stepp, Box 326, Jenks, Oklahoma, "she has been judged perfect."

"We almost always have California Fig Syrup. We give Emma Lee a little when she shows the least sign of constipation, or seems to be catching cold. It has been of great help in keeping her in such splendid condition."

Children suffer when bowels aren't regular. Breath becomes fetid; tongue coated; eyes dull. When these symptoms are neglected, biliousness, feverishness, lack of appetite invariably follow.

The first spoonful of California Fig Syrup relieves all symptoms of constipation. Successive doses help tone and strengthen weak bowels; stimulate appetite and digestion. The genuine, pure vegetable product is marked by the name California. So look for that when buying.

Pipe-Organ to Sound in Famous Tabernacle

One wonders what Spurgeon would have thought of the new organ which is to be brought into use at the Metropolitan tabernacle, writes "Looker On" in the London Daily Chronicle. The great preacher shared the old Scottish dislike of "a kist o' whistles," and in his time would permit no musical instrument of any kind in the tabernacle services, all the singing being led by a precentor, who announced the hymns and sang through the first line to give the congregation a start. In recent years an American organ has been used but the famous church in Newington Butts has had to wait until now for its first pipe-organ. It should be added that, despite—or because of—the lack of instrumental aid, the congregational singing at the tabernacle has always been notably good.

POULTRY
CULL LOAFER HEN
EARLY IN SEASON

Nonlayers Kept Until Fall
Bring Very Small Price.

A hen sold in June will bring in more than a hen sold in October, poultrymen often say.

To test the truth of that statement, particularly as it affects culling the loafers, poultry extension specialists at the Ohio State university present this example on the basis of last year's prices:

"A Leghorn hen weighs four pounds. She was worth 28 cents a pound or $1.12, on June 7 last year. On October 11 this same hen was worth 19 cents a pound, or a total of 76 cents. She was worth 36 cents less simply because of a lowering of price. It would be necessary to make a profit of 36 cents on that bird in the four months from June to October to pay for her depreciation in value."

Prices generally go that way every year, the university poultrymen point out, hence the necessity for culling the loafers here early.

"Another reason," says Paul Zumbro, one of the specialists, "is that culling lowers your feed costs. That Leghorn hen would eat approximately 25 pounds of feed in the four months, which would cost from 60 to 70 cents."

"The hen stops laying the first of June. She is not sold because the flock owner is too busy, or it is thought she will lay later in the summer. Summer comes and the hen is still out of production. October comes and the hen is sold to make room for pullets. On this one hen the poultryman has lost 36 cents for depreciation in price, and 90 cents for feed."

Daily Feed for Young
Ducks Varies Greatly

The amount of feed needed each day for young ducks varies as much as does their growth. Their growth averages a half pound a week, and to make this increase of weight each week requires an additional quantity of feed over the preceding one. The rule is, feed each meal what they will eat up clean with a relish, and do not allow them to linger over the feed trough.

It is better they should have not enough than too much, as they will be in a much better condition to resist the next meal. One thing is considered to be of as much importance as the feed, and that is removing the feed left over and thoroughly cleaning the troughs after each meal. This is scrupulously attended to by successful duck raisers.

Inexpensive Shed Is Suitable for Ducks

Any shed will do for a duck house provided it is draft proof. It does not have to be very warm. It would be a good idea to have a concrete bottom which should be covered with shavings. A few shavings should be spread in the corners so as to give the ducks a dry bed.

For ten ducks and a couple of drakes a house ten feet square would answer. If it were 12 by 20 it would be much better. You could build a shed roof and have one or two windows occupying about one-fourth of the south elevation. It would be well to have these windows slide up or down or sideways, keeping them open a little bit at all times even if it is cold, for ventilation.

Poultry Hints

More revenue from farm flocks is obtained from eggs than from broilers or roasters sold.

Hatching eggs need careful handling. Eggs that become chilled and wet are not likely to hatch well.

Owners should not attempt to raise chicks in makeshift quarters, as the results will not be satisfactory.

Ventilation in the poultry house must be secured without drafts.

After the usual crop of broilers goes on the market, the prices are materially reduced as compared to the ones that are developed from the early hatched chicks.

Try the sanitary plan this year: Healthy chicks, disease free ground, brooder stove in disinfected brooder house, balanced feed in self feeders, brooder house and equipment kept clean throughout the season.

Turkey Business on Stable Basis

Heretofore Industry Has Been Regarded as Side
Issue and Gamble.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Turkey raising in the United States has been regarded as a side issue and a gamble, but increasing knowledge of parasitic diseases and their control is putting the industry on a more stable basis, says A. R. Lee, poultry husbandman of the United States Department of Agriculture. "There are now more than three and a half million turkeys on farms in this country, and they constitute 1 1/2 per cent of all poultry. The 1929 crop of market turkeys indicated a decided advance in the business as compared with 1928. The estimated increase was about 9 per cent."

Information Needed.

In recognition of the increased interest in turkeys and the need for further information concerning parasitic diseases, the United States Department of Agriculture has established a foundation flock of turkeys at the United States range experiment station at Miles City, Mont. This work got under way last spring. Of 600 birds raised last season, 300 were selected for the breeding flocks. Everett E. Wehr, a research worker, is devoting all his time to the investigation of parasitic diseases. The work at this station will also include a study of the comparative cost of raising turkeys in confinement and on free range.

The flock was established by purchasing hatching eggs which were incubated artificially. The young birds were brooded in special brooder houses with clean yards until they were about eight weeks old. The investigators took these precautions to prevent infestation of the poultry by such parasites as are introduced by adult turkeys. When large enough to range the young points were provided with large fenced lots and inexpensive shelters for roosting.

Modern Improvements.

"Modern improvements in mechanical means of hatching and brooding have done much to develop the turkey industry," Mr. Lee says. "Day-old poulters are now produced by commercial hatcheries and shipped by parcel post in much the same manner as baby chicks. Artificial brooding has been of particular value in preventing losses from blackhead disease which at one time threatened to destroy the industry."

Research workers have determined that this disease is caused by a parasite which cannot live long in soil, but which may be transmitted in the egg of another parasite, the cecum worm. The blackhead parasite survives for long periods in the worm egg. As both turkeys and chickens may have blackhead, usually in a chronic form in mature birds, and as both may also have cecum worms, prevention of the acute, destructive form of blackhead in young turkeys calls for rearing on clean ground away from chickens and older turkeys.

Edible Period of Many Vegetables Lengthened

Many of our best vegetables are edible for a very short period of time. For example, sweet corn is used for food only when it is in the roasting ear stage. When past this stage it cannot be used. The same is true of such crops as beans, peas, lettuce, spinach, radishes and many others. The edible period of such vegetables can be greatly lengthened by a succession of plantings at different dates. For example, if a row or two of sweet corn is planted every two weeks from early in May until the first of July, the roasting ear season will be extended from two to three weeks to nearly two months. This succession of plantings can be practiced for many other vegetables as well with the result that the fresh vegetable season will be greatly lengthened.

Human Deaths From Rat
Poison Are on Decline

At the second annual conference of the Eastern Rodent-Control district, held in Washington, it was reported that clippings from thousands of newspapers throughout America indicated a material decline in the number of accidental human deaths from rat poison during 1929.

Since the sales and use of exterminators have not decreased, the conference concluded that the diminishing death rate is due to the increased, nation-wide use of powdered rat squill, which is unique as an exterminator in that it is deadly to rats, live stock, dogs, cats, poultry and even baby chicks. It is highly recommended by the United States Department of Agriculture.

Oats Grown With Wheat
as Succotash Are Good

There is a very common notion that oats grown with wheat as a succotash are not good for seed. Just what the foundation of this notion is no one seems to know. There is nothing in the association of the wheat with the oats to in any way disturb its inheritance and it therefore is just as good for seed as oats that have been grown alone. The main difficulty in using such grain for seed lies in thoroughly separating the wheat and oats so that a clean crop can be raised.

Muskmelons May Pay
Well on Local Market

Any Garden Soil Is Suitable for Good Crop.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Muskmelons produced locally and sold in small towns and on roadside markets could often be grown to advantage in small acreages in many parts of the country, according to Farmers' Bulletin 1468-F entitled "Muskmelons," recently revised by the United States Department of Agriculture and available to anyone requesting it. The country's carlot markets are well supplied from the big producing centers, but local growers in many sections can advantageously produce and sell melons on the smaller markets which are now not fully supplied by the carlot movement, says the author, W. R. Beattie, horticulturist of the bureau of plant industry.

Well drained, warm, sandy-loam or silt loam soils are best adapted to melon growing although some of the finest melons grow on sandy river bottoms and rich clay loams. Mr. Beattie points out. Warmth, drainage, abundance of quickly available plant food and humus are essential for success. Any garden soil is suitable for melons grown for home use.

Insect pests and diseases are the greatest obstacles to muskmelon growing, according to the bulletin. This crop must be rotated, appearing not often than once in five or six years on the same land and with no related vine crops in the rotation if the soil is to be kept unfested. Seed treatment and dusting or spraying will be necessary for success, the bulletin points out.

The author also comments on varieties and types of melons best suited to the local market and home gardens, on the preparation of soil, cultivation, harvesting and packing of melons. In established melon growing sections the most urgent need is for improvement of quality and standardization of packs, says Mr. Beattie.

Requests for Farmers' Bulletin 1468-F should be addressed to the Office of Information United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Selecting Dairy Sire on Basis of Past Records

In selecting a dairy bull on the basis of the record of his ancestors, consideration should be given to the conditions under which the records were made, says the United States Department of Agriculture. An investigation by the Bureau of Dairy Industry at Beltsville, Md., showed that when cows were milked and fed three times a day instead of twice, confined in box stalls instead of in stanchions, fed enough to make them fat instead of keeping them in ordinary flesh, and bred to freshen at intervals of 15 months instead of 12 the production was increased 50 per cent.

A herd improvement association record of 400 pounds of butterfat, if made under ordinary farm conditions, the bureau says, is equal to an advanced registry or register of merit record of 600 pounds.

Bordeaux Mixture Good
Spray for Leaf Hopper

Bordeaux mixture has been found to be an effective remedy for the control of the potato leaf hopper and the discant known as "hopper burn" which accompanies attack by this pest, says the United States Department of Agriculture. Leaf hoppers may migrate from the early to the late crop, and spraying should begin when the pests first appear. The spray should be a wet mix and should thoroughly cover the plants including the undersides of the leaves. Each side of every row should be sprayed. When leaf hoppers are abundant, three applications should be made, and four are sometimes necessary in hot, dry summers. Dusting with commercial copper-lime dusts is also effective.

Agricultural Notes

Make sure that growing heifers have plenty of fresh, pure water at all times.

Cows should be removed from the pasture several hours before milking if their milk is known to contain the off flavor produced by weeds and plants.

No purchase of vitamin rich feeds is necessary where the proper amounts of good alfalfa are fed, say about one pound to every 100 pounds live weight, in a balanced ration.

Where milk is sold it is usually more convenient to cool it at once after milking. It is true that bacteria do not begin to increase rapidly in milk till from two to four hours after milking.

Dairy farmers may help improve the price of cream by consuming more butter and dairy products. Temporary overproduction may be corrected by selling for slaughter at low producing and unprofitable cows.

Efficient separators deliver skim milk that tests below 2 per cent. When the fat content of skim milk reaches 5 per cent there is a preventable loss of three pounds of butterfat in 1,000 pounds of skim milk delivered by the separator.

Odd Penalty Inflicted for Picking Tree Leaf

Every leaf you pluck costs you a piece of your shirt!

This stringent and fantastic penalty was exacted for violating the protection bestowed by an emperor on a tree. The tree was an ancient lime tree that stood in the town of Adelsheim in Baden, Germany, and the Emperor Ruprecht decreed its perpetual protection in 1401. So strong was the tradition of this medieval enactment that even at the beginning of the Nineteenth century offenders were still penalized for plucking twigs or leaves; although a modification of the original rule, almost as fantastic as the emperor's whimsical decree itself, let offenders off with whole shirts if they would buy ribbons and tie them to the tree.

By 1867, however, the tree had declined to such a ruinous state that it had to be cut down, and for 50 years or so its place stood empty. Now, however, a new lime tree grows where the "Emperor's Tree" once stood—Kansas City's Star Science Service.

Nothing Doing

Secretary McClellan of the American Institute of Actuaries told a story at a banquet in Des Moines. "A waiter in a night club," he said, "complained bitterly to the cloakroom girl.

"The whole night through," he moaned, "I've had the hardest kind of hard luck. Haven't made a cent on the side, not a cent. I added in the date on every blasted bill, but not once did the trick work. Not once the whole night through."

"You poor fish," said the cloakroom girl, "no wonder your trick didn't work. Don't you know that all these people here are attending the actuaries' convention?"

Buffalo in the Arctic

As a result of the success attending the introduction of the reindeer into the American Arctic, the experiment has been tried with buffalo taken from points in the northern part of the United States and southern Canada. Nineteen American buffaloes were liberated more than a year ago at Jarvis creek in Alaska, and while they have been carefully watched they have been given no special care, except an occasional ration of food when nature had cut off the supply. The last reports indicate that the animals were thriving in the most satisfactory manner.

Course Marker Successful

Tests of the "dromograph," an apparatus invented by a French naval officer for automatically marking the true course of a ship on the vessel's chart, are reported to have been successful. The device indicates the ship's exact geographical position at any time and also its precise course in arriving at the location. A stylus marks not only main changes in the course, but also smaller variations resulting from the helmsman's operation of the rudder.

Freak Addresses Barred

The Post Office department has announced that hereafter letters bearing freak addresses will be sent to the nearest letter office if they do not bear addresses of senders. Postal authorities in the past have been indulgent toward violations of the rule that all letters and post cards should bear proper addresses, but this recent decision would indicate that it was forced by an increase of first-class matter bearing freak addresses.

Mr. Hoover On The Panic of 1929

(Editorial from The New York World, May 3, 1930)

"All slumps are the inexorable consequences of the destructive forces of booms," said President Hoover in his address before the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. "If we inquire into the primary cause of the great boom on the stock exchanges last year," he continued, "we find it rests mainly on certain forces inherent in human minds." All this is quite true. Emotions have a rhythm: when optimism is overcome pessimism is almost sure to follow, and in the financial world undue speculative optimism paves the road to depression.

Mr. Hoover says in the past these vast contagions of speculation have proved uncontrollable by any method that the economist, the business man or the government has been able to devise. That was certainly the case with the earlier financial crises through which this country has passed. It is not at all certain that this is true with regard to the stock-market panic of 1929. Business men, financiers and economists were fully aware of the danger, and they repeatedly indicated the necessary preventive. It was the government which blocked all preventive efforts. It was President Coolidge who allowed himself to be quoted as saying early in 1928 that "the record-breaking increase in brokers' loans is not large enough to cause unfavorable comment." It was Mr. Coolidge and Mr. Mellon, one or the other, and sometimes both, who repeatedly rushed into print with rosy statements when the stock market showed signs of nervousness or of growing stale, and it was the Federal Reserve Board, of which Mr. Mellon is Chairman, which repeatedly refused to permit some of the Reserve Banks to advance their discount rates and curb the speculative mania.

During these feverish days Mr. Hoover sat in the Cabinet. He knew the conditions then as well as he does now. He knew that capital was being diverted from legitimate business to speculate, as he now says, "waste, extravagance and unsound enterprise, with the inevitable collapse in panic." But did Mr. Hoover warn the country of impending catastrophe? Not one word of caution escaped him. Deploping a misfortune after the event, as he now does, does not repair the damage which a word in time might have prevented or at least diminished.

Again We Play

Recreation, with a big "R" will be America's chief pastime for the next four or five months. The strain of winter is now in the process of being entirely forgotten and those who have hugged the firesides and the great indoors are now emerging for their sunshine, fresh air and the additional enjoyment of life that goes with these more healthful activities.

Every summer brings a tremendous increase in all sorts of recreational activities. There can be no question about the fact that America is health conscious to a greater extent than ever before.

Motoring, or touring, as some prefer to call it, continues on the increase. Perhaps educational desires as well as health are responsible for this. Or maybe it's a throwback from preceding generations of wanderers.

Motor boating, sailing and every other division of aquatic sports are decidedly more popular. Tennis courts, golf courses, the baseball diamond and riding paths are crowded to the hilt regardless of where you go.

All in the interest of health—health so necessary to overcome the strain and nerve-racking pace of modern life.

Some might argue that all this increased interest in sports and recreation is due, not to a general realization of their health-giving benefits, but to the inherent desire for play. Such opinions certainly are counteracted by the tremendously apparent revision of eating habits. Diet is getting greater attention today than ever before.

Watch what the average business man and woman eats, the next time you invade a lunch room or restaurant. Light salads, abstinence from coffee or tea, and a general demand for light healthful desserts of the flavored gelatin type are what you will find predominating.

The search for health through recreation and diet has become a universal American custom. And no greater necessity exists in America today.

Where Are The Men To Lead?

There isn't a lad but wants to grow,
Manly and true at heart.
And every lad would like to know,
The secret we impart.
He doesn't desire to slack or shirk
Oh, haven't you heard him plead?
He'll follow a man at work or play
If only the man will lead.
Where are the men to lead today?
Sparing an hour or two,
Teaching the lads the game to play,
Just as the men should do?
Village and slum are calling, "Come
Here are the boys; indeed
Who can tell what they may become
If only the men will lead?
Motor and golf, and summer sport
Fill up the time a lot.
But wouldn't you like to feel you'd taught
Even a boy a knot?
Country and home depend upon you,
Character most we need;
How can a lad know what to do
If there isn't a man to lead?
Where are the men to lend a hand?
Echo it far and wide—
Men who will rise on every hand,
Bring the "Great Divide," ation and flag and tongue unite
Joining each class and creed.
There are the boys who would do right,
But then, where are the men to lead?

"ROUND TOWN"

--by Doug

Opinions expressed in this column by this writer have no connection with the general policies of this paper, being wholly those of the writer, in the manner they are written.

Here this newspaper is spreading out. It has a full page of funnies, a full page of newspaper pictures, a good continued story, a fashion section for the ladies, a weekly Sunday School Lesson, N. B. C. radio programs, and so many other things I haven't room to name them all. Just look over the News carefully this week, and see what you find. These added features will appear each week now, and the editor tells me he is not going to increase the price of subscription, nor the advertising rate, so it looks to me like you are getting more than your money's worth when you subscribe for the News. So do it now, while the doing is good.

For something real interesting, you really should read the story about the foreign countries that appear on the front page of the second section each week. They are real informative.

The News is just getting better and better and can't help it. Just think, every week somebody gets a free meal at the Dixie Cafe, and the invitation is in the News. Then there are many advertisers whose ads appear in the News, telling you people of the bargains they are offering. Read them, that's what they are there for.

Now, about the fires, and just a tip to those who blow the siren. I believe that better results would be obtained if the machine was allowed to go off and on more often. This would produce that creepy sound that sirens are supposed to give out. Try it next time and see, anyway.

Well, you know fellows like myself must always have something to write about, and town fires usually furnish many amusing sights to comment on. At the fire the other morning I was able to satisfy some curiosities I have been harboring about some people for a long time. One fellow who I really thought would sleep in loud colored pajamas, really sleeps in an ordinary white night-shirt. Now I didn't know that before. And too, I learned that some of the young ladies who I thought had naturally wavy hair, only kept their hair "done-up" over night to produce that wave.

I was wondering about a lot of things last week, and now I must wonder what the city officials are going to do about the negroes congregating down near the railroad and at time actually blocking the sidewalk, on Saturday night. I am beginning to believe that it is becoming a nuisance and something ought to be done about it.

I would like to make a match between this "Kool Knight" who wrote in last week, and that almost irresistible young lady of my acquaintance, "Sudden Sally." And what a match that would be.

Just heard of a little occurrence at a place where courtesy is supposed to prevail. A fellow, who must have been the keeper of the bees—or the bughouse, or maybe it is the club house reprimanded a fellow because he failed to park his car just right. How much better it would have ben had this keeper gone about the slight correction in a more courteous manner, than by shouting from the front porch of the company who employs him.

An employer can not be too careful in choosing his employees who are to mix with his customers, these days. Probably there are stores in Clanton that should be drawing more trade than they are. If this is true, there is a leak somewhere, and the employers should go about to stop these leaks. The public demands service and courtesy these days. Maybe there is one clerk who is keeping trade away. If so, don't discharge him—make a little study of his actions, place yourself in a customer's place, and you will find where the fault is. And I am of the opinion that it would not hurt some of the business men in Clanton to follow this suggestion, even if it does come from me. Some of the qualities every clerk in a store should have are—neat appearance, be courteous at all times to all people entering the store, be accommodating, an unquestionable character, a good knowledge of the stock of goods carried, be efficient in service with a smile, and always on the job.

"Gas at Dief's" is something I see quite often. I guess we are supposed to know what that means, because generally when one speaks of "Dief's" they think of gasoline, Goodyears, and Service. There's Herschel Gore, J. E. Easterling and Wilbur Scarbrough, one or two are always on the job at Dief's Service Station.

I got wind of a new store to open in Clanton soon. Without a doubt this man who is contemplating this opening is something of an optimist or is succeeding enough to spread out some, because when a business can carry a program of expansion at this time of year it undoubtedly is going forward some.

Bridge Players

Bridge players are usually sufferers from an inferiority complex who find in the game an easy way to satisfy their striving for superiority. Dr. Alfred Adler, Viennese psychologist, said to an audience at Columbia University in a lecture in the McMillin Academics Theatre.

Dr. Adler gave his views on bridge following a formal talk in which he held that most forms of unhealthy behavior are attempts to acquire superiority with the least effort. A member of the audience, evidently a bridge devotee, asked him to give his opinion of a person who spends the most of their spare time at the game.

"Most people play cards to waste time," Dr. Adler answered. "Time, if a man is not courageous, is his greatest enemy. Bridge is a great invention. A little of it is relaxation. But a lot of it becomes a mental habit, and an attempt to satisfy a striving for superiority. It offers an opportunity to conquer others.

"If you see a bridge player who has won, you will notice a nice expression of superiority on their face."

No person can bear to appear weak or inferior, and the person who is more interested in himself than in others usually develops a complex, the psychologist asserted. The superiority complex, he said, is only the mask with which the consciously inferior person conceals his weakness.—Medical World.

Hon. Hugh D. Merrill
For Lieut. Governor

perience for the position he seeks and the indications are that he will get an overwhelming majority over his three opponents.

Having enjoyed a long and varied legislative experience, having been elevated to the highest position in the Lower House by his fellows, that of the Speakership; having attained distinction as a Circuit Judge, having made a success as a lawyer in the private practice of his profession, Judge Merrill is equipped as few men are to preside over the State Senate and to serve in lieu of the Governor during his extended absence from the State, should that occur, and to take over the reins of the office of Chief Executive in case of a vacancy.

But the greatest responsibility that attaches to the office of Lieutenant Governor comes in connection with his appointment of the Senate committees. In that way he is given the opportunity of exercising a strong voice over legislation, and by reason of his commitments as a candidate in this race The Anniston Star feels safe in reposing this great privilege in his hands. The biggest question before the State at the present time is that of education, and our schools can go forward only in proportion as they are supported by the taxes of the people. Judge Merrill believes that there should be no decrease in the educational appropriations as they now stand; and while he is opposed to an increase in taxes in view of existing business conditions, he believes that by the exercise of economy the State can secure enough money to increase the school funds, to continue the road building program, to maintain the present excellent public health system and to carry on all other legitimate enterprises of the commonwealth.

In view of this commitment on his part and in recognition of the fine personal qualities of the man, The Anniston Star is pleased to commend Judge Merrill to the people of the State as a public servant who may be relied upon to do his duty as he sees it. He is a loyal Democrat, a good citizen and a man who has given generously of his time to the promotion of the common weal. He stands high above any of his opponents in the race for the office he seeks and the people of the State would render themselves a disservice if they failed to make him their next Lieutenant Governor.

CHEMIST FINDS USE FOR WASTE SAWDUST

Auburn, Ala., June 5.—Sawdust, of which thousands of tons go to waste annually in the South, may become valuable as a source of fuel in homes and factories. A process for converting such sawdust into briquettes which have a heating value of from 50 to 90 per cent above the heating value of air-dried wood has been found by Dr. Cleburne A. Basore, chemical engineer of Auburn. The method is described in Bulletin No. 1 of the Engineering Experiment Station of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute.

Briquettes made from sawdust in the past showed little resistance to the action of water, disintegrated rapidly upon aging, and had other disadvantages. By the new process, which calls for removal of the elasticity of the wood by preheating, briquettes are made which have resistance to water and aging, and are of value as a substitute for cord wood and as a fuel for domestic purposes.

The bulletin gives detailed specifications for a plant with a capacity of 20 tons of briquettes per day and states that manufacture of the briquettes should yield a good profit.

The new process has great economic value since more than half of the weight of a pine tree is wasted in the production of lumber. Much of this waste is in the form of sawdust and shavings.

The main step involved in the new process is the preheating to destroy the elasticity of the wood. This preheating also eliminates moisture and considerable combined oxygen and hydrogen from the wood with the result that the weight is decreased about one-third and the heating value per pound almost doubled. The preheated sawdust is then moistened and briquetted hot without the addition of a binder and the resulting briquettes are firm and strong enough to stand rough handling.

A SHOCK MAY BE NECESSARY

The people will not let democracy fall, but they must sometimes be shocked into a realization of the fact that the burden of maintaining a democracy rests on them as voters rather than on the shoulders of elected officials who seem to become imbued with the idea that as soon as they gain power their chief duty is to start out to restrict the rights and liberties of the individual.

ROADS MAKE FARM PROFITS

Profitable farming is dependent upon good highway transportation. The better the roads the more profitable the farming. This is the conclusion reached by a survey recently conducted by the Agricultural Experiment Station of Cornell University.

More and better farm-to-market roads enable American farmers to transport their products quickly and cheaply.

In the state of New York it was disclosed that farmers living on paved roads drove their trucks 725 miles more a year, on the average, than those living on dirt roads. Further, while but one-half of farms on dirt roads own trucks, two-thirds of the farmers served by paved roads have them.

Several states are now conducting campaigns to provide rural districts with all-weather roads. Thousands of miles of expensive main highways have been built which are of little benefit to the farmers until feeder roads are built connecting them with rural districts.

Such feeder roads would be of value to town and city merchants who would gain business that is now kept away by impassable roads. They would attract tourists by opening up new territory and relieve main highways of congestion. Such roads must be built if agriculture is to keep up with the march of progress.

"Inside" Information

Do not wrap your ice in paper of cloth. Melting ice saves feed by reducing the temperature of the air in the refrigerator.

When vegetables or fruits are cut for a salad, the pieces should be large enough so the salad will not be mushy after the dressing is added. All ingredients should be crisp and cold, and with no water clinging to lettuce leaves. Add dressing just before serving for dressing tends to wilt the vegetables and salad greens. Potato salad is an exception to this rule.

Hang up a card in the kitchen and note on it the quantity of vegetables, fruit, eggs, poultry, etc., you bring from your garden for family use. At the end of the month you can estimate the value if they had been sold. You will then have some idea of what the poultry-yard and garden contribute to your family living.

Make for the littles children several two-piece outfits, consisting of bloomers or panties on a sun suit top, and a matching dress to slip on over the sun suit when the sunning time is over. At first sun baths are given for short periods only, until the child's skin is accustomed to the strong ultra-violet rays. The little overdress will also be useful in taking a child through the streets, to a neighbor's house or to a playground where the sun suit part can be worn suitably.

CHEVROLETS SCALE PIKE'S PEAK WITH GREAT EASE

Colorado Springs, Col., June 5.—A concrete example of the tremendous strides made by automotive engineers toward the goal of mechanical perfection in the modern motor car is provided here daily on the Pikes Peak highway.

A few years ago, a car that would scale the Peak was a front-page feature throughout the country, while today to the automotive engineer, a car's ability to perform ably and satisfactorily in the thin rarefied air and on the long steep ascents of the Peak is taken more or less for granted.

Despite a greatly improved highway up the Peak, the long continuous climb and the light air pressure in the high altitudes, which used to mean a boiling radiator and an engine too hot to make the grade, provide one of the severest tests in America of the mechanical condition of a car.

Even more outstanding than the performance of those tourist automobiles which make a single trip up the steep incline is the record of a fleet of trucks used to maintain the highway in constant repair. The fleet now in such service includes three Chevrolet sixes which see almost daily use up in the region above the cloud-levels.

Recently the fleet has been used to haul away huge mountains of snow to prepare the highway for the Summer tourist travel. The route was expected to be opened early in June. With the snow cleared away, the fleet will continue in daily service doing maintenance and repair work on the highway.

The Chevrolets used in this work have been in operation for more than a year. That the cars are operating today with the same degree of economy and dependability as a year ago is a fitting tribute to the achievements to those engineers who work quietly behind the scenes in the interest of improved performance at lower cost.

1,000 LAMBS ARE SOLD
AT 2ND CO-OP SALE

Lamb producers of the black belt of Alabama sold 1,000 lambs on May 29 at the second co-op lamb sale of the season for which they received 10 cents per pound for tops. It was also announced at the same time that a clean-up sale will be held June 26. The sales are conducted by the growers assisted by the Alabama Farm Bureau and Extension Service workers.

Mrs. Eva Moulton testifying in her divorce suit in Chicago declared her husband "the world's champion grouch."

On a single day seven men reported to the police that their pockets had been picked in three different Chicago churches.

DON'T ROCK THE BOAT

Have we reached a period where industry may be encroaching on individualism? Is bureaucracy going to creep into business and be as menacing to private initiative and enterprise as bureaucracy in government?

Is business unconsciously preparing the stage for political opportunists to take advantage of public bewilderment and uncertainty in the present situation?

In an endeavor to prevent a possible industrial bureaucracy from encroaching on individualism, will the people be misled into enlarging the powers of a political or governmental bureaucracy?

The Professional Reformer's Monument

A great barrier to crime prevention is the reformer.

He continually asks for more laws, in spite of the fact that unenforceable and unnecessary legislation has become the great American joke. He cries, at one time, for stricter punishment for offenders, and at another for less punishment. Cold logic and intelligent analysis of facts mean nothing to him. He is ruled by his emotion. His monument is the tens of thousands of laws that now burden the statute books.

It is a historical fact that most of the great reform movements have turned upon themselves and become boomerangs. The movement which culminated in the New York anti-revolver law is an example. A few months ago the Brooklyn Grand Jury petitioned for the law's repeal!

American prisons are overpopulated, yet many of the worst criminals remain at large, practically immune from punishment by virtue of legal technicalities that make justice impotent. The law-passing mania has been productive of the greatest period of lawlessness in our history.

Fewer fool laws and better enforcement; judicial procedure that finds out the facts, instead of discussing irrelevant technicalities; more efficient, better paid and better equipped police departments; quicker, surer arrests and convictions of malefactors—in this direction lies crime prevention.

The Mazaroff Mystery

by J. S. FLETCHER
Illustrations by IRWIN MYERS

(© by Alfred A. Knopf, Inc.)
W. N. U. Service

The most casual eye would pick out Salim Mazaroff as a notable figure, a man of affairs, who rightfully claimed the attention of the multitude; yet there was a gentility about him, a democracy of manner, which reserved him no pinnacle above his fellows but made him one of them. There was an element of mystery about him too, but it was not the sort to produce suspicion, but rather, of the type to intrigue and invite a friendly interest.

Being so obviously a real man and so affable and open-handed, he was about the last person in the world one would think of as likely to have created powerful enemies or of being the object of a sinister pursuit and revenge. Why should anyone wish to do harm to this able, generous and thoroughly likable individual?

Facts being as they were and no dark chapters in his life even hinted at, it became all the more strange that such things as afterward developed should have befallen him; that he should have become the center of a mystery that was cunning, cruel and baffling.

This is a typical J. S. Fletcher story of the puzzle variety. This author's popularity rests upon the fact that he always has an entertaining tale to tell and tells it ably. His people are always human and he never loses track of the many threads in his mystery or fails to work out his puzzles satisfactorily.

CHAPTER I

Mr. Mazaroff

It was Dick Harker who first put me in touch with the man whose mysterious murder, while in my company, formed the basis of what came to be famous in three continents as the Mazaroff affair. Harker and I were old schoolfellows; we entered the army together as subalterns; we were in the same battalion throughout the great war; we were wounded on the same day, and in the same scrap—a fortnight before the armistice; we were sent to the same home hospital and were eventually discharged from it at the same time, each unit for any further military service, but fortunately in possession of our full complement of limbs. Harker walked into my room one morning while I was still at breakfast, and hung down a copy of the Times, indicating a blue-penciled advertisement in the "Personal" column.

"That's your job, Mervyn," he said in his usual direct fashion. "Get busy!"

I took up the paper and read the advertisement before making any remark.

"The advertiser, who has recently returned to England after a prolonged absence, and is desirous of making an extensive tour through the northern shires, in his private automobile, desires the company of a bright, sociable, well-educated, and well-informed young gentleman, preferably an ex-officer, invalided out of the service. Applications, with full and precise details and references, to be addressed Box M. 5343, the Times, E.C.4."

I think it was more out of curiosity than anything that I replied to that advertisement, setting forth my qualifications and detailing my references. Yet I never expected any reply: I knew well enough that there were hundreds of men whose qualifications and references would be just as good as my own—why should I be singled out? It was therefore with a good deal of surprise that, about a fortnight later, I received and read the following letter:

"Hotel Cecil,

"8th September, 1919.

"My Dear Sir, I am much obliged to you for your letter of the 23rd August. I think you and I would get on together very pleasantly, and I shall be further obliged to you if you will call on me at this hotel tomorrow morning—about half past twelve o'clock so that we may have a little talk. I remain, my dear sir,

"Truly yours,

"SALIM MAZAROFF."

I walked into the Hotel Cecil next morning at precisely twelve-thirty. Evidently Mr. Mazaroff had already given certain instructions about me, for as soon as I inquired for him, I, in my turn, was asked if I was Mr. Mervyn Holt, and on my assenting, was handed over to an attendant who whisked me off to a private—and palatial—suite of rooms. He installed me in an ante-chamber, tapped at an inner door, murmured my name to somebody within, closed the door, informed me that Mr. Mazaroff wouldn't keep me one minute, and went away. And I discovered at once that Mr. Mazaroff was really a man of his word, for before a minute had gone, the door opened again, and he stood there with outstretched hand.

I took a good look at him as I went forward. I judged him to be about six feet in height; his breadth corresponded; altogether he gave one the impression of bigness and solidity. His age it was difficult to estimate; his brown hair and beard were grizzled, and between his eyes and his mustache wrinkles; he looked like a man who has weathered storms, and been under fierce suns and drying winds. There was a distinctive air of good nature, good humor, even of benevolence, about him, but it was somewhat discounted by a long, sharp nose and close-set, small eyes, and further by a cast in the left eye. But his smile was pleasant enough; so was the twinkle of his eyes, and there was nothing cold nor formal about his manner.

"Glad to see you," he said, almost brusquely.

I was certain that wherever or how—ever Mr. Mazaroff had come by his un-English name, he himself was a Scotsman: there was no mistaking his accent.

"I hope you're feeling quite well again after your wounds?" he asked.

"Quite fit, thank you," I answered. "Fit for light work, anyway."

"Aye, well," he said, nodding, "as I said in my letter, I think you and I'll get on very pleasantly, if you care to come with an old fellow like me." "I shall be pleased to go with you," I answered. "I hope I shall be able to do all you want. You think I shall?"

"It's little I want but company," he replied. "I'm a lone man—neither kith, kin, nor friends. I've been out of this country many years, and now I'm back I just want to dander round a bit, seeing places. An idle time, eh?"

"You've no fixed plan?" I inquired. "No more than that we'll just get into my car and go north," he answered. "Stopping where we like and when we like. I'll tell you I've a fancy for old towns, anything old and gray and cool. You take me?"

"The Great North road, then, will be a good route to follow?" I said. "I know that road and its surroundings—well!"

"That's it!" he exclaimed, joyfully. "We'll do very well—just progressing northward. I've no particular object—except that when we get far north, there's a place I want to turn aside to—Marrasdale moor—just to renew acquaintance. What about terms, now?" he asked, diffidently.

"I think I ought to leave that to you, Mr. Mazaroff," I answered. "I'd prefer to."

He gave a sigh of what, it was plain, was sheer relief.

"That's just what I'd like you to do," he said, simply. "That's a thing that gentlemen shouldn't bargain about. Leave it to me—you'll not regret it. I'm a very rich man, I'd like to see you, and I'm entitled to have your little games and fancies, eh? Very well, now—when can you be ready to start?"

"Any time, with a couple of hours' notice," I replied.

"Good—good!" he exclaimed. "Then I'll just tell you what we'll do, Holt. Bring your kit along here this afternoon, and we'll start about five o'clock, and run gently along as far as we like before dinner time—there'll be some old town where we can spend a peaceful evening and a quiet night in an old-fashioned hotel. I've a fine Rolls-Royce car in the garage, and a thoroughly dependable chauffeur, Webster, a trusty, good, sensible fellow, and we'll be right as rain. Come by five o'clock. That'll suit you? Good! And now we'll just go down and take a bit of lunch together."

Mr. Mazaroff and I spent a couple of hours over that lunch and our cigars and coffee. He proved himself a knowing and generous host and a great talker. His talk was worth listening to. I soon discovered that he had seen many strange places and peoples; without giving me any definite information about himself or his pursuits, he let me know that he had traveled extensively in various out-of-the-way parts of Asia and Africa. Presently I left him and went away to make ready for our journey: at five o'clock I was back at the hotel with my luggage, and by a quarter past we were off.

We followed out Mazaroff's line of going as far as we liked, and stopping where and when we chose. It was difficult to get him away from towns like Stamford and Grantham—at York, after a preliminary inspection of the old city, he announced his intention of staying a week: we stopped ten days.

All the way north, he was never tired of drawing me out about the war, and my own doings in it. It was of no use to profess that one had forgotten; he would have the whole tale. And for all the youngsters who had done their bit he professed an admiration which was akin to veritable hero worship.

We got on together splendidly—he was an excellent, a fatherly and brotherly companion. At the end of a month he and I were inseparable. We had then run into the crisp October weather of the north, and were on the southern edge of Northumberland. There, after consulting his map, he gave his chauffeur orders to cut across country, north by west, making by way of Hexham and Wark for the wild lands beyond, and for a particular place marked on the chart as the Woodcock Inn on Marrasdale moor.

When, rounding a heather-clad bluff that sloped sharply down to our track, we came in sight of the Woodcock Inn, I was amazed to think that a hostelry should be found in such a desert. It stood, a gaunt gray mass of stone, on the edge of a great moor ringed about by high hills—so veritable a solitude as one could set eyes on. Beyond it there was not a sign of human life or habitation.

"What an extraordinary place for an inn!" I exclaimed as we moved nearer. "What custom can they get there?"

"I know this country," Mazaroff said. "Used to come here when I was a youngster. And though it's true there isn't a sign of life about us except what's signified by the old inn yonder, it's not such a desert as it looks at first sight. There's nothing on the moor—Marrasdale moor—but you'll observe that there's valleys cutting in between the hills that run down to its edge? Well, there's villages in those valleys, and farmsteads, too, and more than one sizable count-house. I mind them all well enough, I'd like to think it's more years than I care to estimate since I set eyes on them!"

"There'll be people you remember," I suggested, "and who'll remember you?"

"Not after all these years!" he answered quickly. "And between you and me and the post, Holt, I've no wish to remember people, nor—more particularly—to be remembered by anybody. I don't want it to be known that I'm other than a complete stranger to the place."

I was wondering why he should be so mysterious about this, when we drew up at the door of the inn.

There was a plain board sign over the wide, open door, unadorned save for a faded painting of a woodcock flying across a moor and scene. Beneath it, in tarnished gilt letters appeared the words: "The Woodcock Inn by James Musgrave."

The class night exercises attracted a good audience Saturday night. The first part of the program consisted of the class song, history, prophecy, will, etc. It was very attractively staged around a blazing camp fire. The play which followed was W. D. Howell's "The Mouse Trap" and it made a decided hit with the audience. Not only was it unusually well acted, but the costumes of a generation ago called forth as much mirth as the ridiculous situation. The class divided the receipts between a bookcase for the new Encyclopedia Britannica and athletic equipment for next year. They also gave fifteen dollars toward the tuition of some student next year.

On Friday morning the class of 1930 was formally graduated, thirteen receiving diplomas, while a fourteenth who lacks one unit of having completed the course will receive hers as soon as the work is done.

Rev. Russell Johnson of North Birmingham made the address, his subject being, "Creeds of Self and Service." The two members of the class whose standing had been the highest for the last three years of the course, Sally Thompson and Jessie Martin, also read essays.

Among the out-of-town visitors on the campus either Saturday night or Friday morning were Mr. and Mrs. M. E. Roy and small daughter, Mrs. J. W. Snow and Misses Cola and Ola Ruffin, all of Helena; Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Jefferson, and Mrs. J. W. Adams of Jemison; Mrs. Pearl Sims, Mrs. Harvey Moore and Mrs. Ralph Wilbanks of Birmingham; Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Taylor, Mr. Raymond Smith and Mrs. L. E. Diefenderfer of Clanton; Mr. and Mrs. B. T. Gibbons, Miss Theresa, Ben and Billy Gibbons of Deatsville; Mr. and Mrs. Little and daughter, Amber, Mrs. Clyde Little, Mr. Olin Williams and Mrs. Jewel Shepherd of Billingsley; Mrs. Payne Bryan of Tuscaloosa; Mr. George Hughes, Mr. Clinton Arthur and Jordan Bell of Montgomery; and Mrs. Isabella Gilbert of Miami, Fla.

ONE ALABAMA CONVICT VS.
SIX ALABAMA CHILDREN

According to a recent issue of the Montgomery Advertiser every convict costs the state of Alabama in salaries alone $130.00 each year. This amount does not include the cost of food, clothing, and other items necessary for maintaining Alabama's convict system.

To provide each child enrolled in Alabama's public school system with a teacher for a school year costs the state $18.75. For the amount required to supervise one convict Alabama can teach six children. When all expenses involved in the education of an Alabama child are considered, including revenue receipts from federal, state, county, and district funds, as well as gifts, rent, and interest, the cost for educating a child in Alabama at present is $28.73.

50 Years' Use of Black-Draught

"About fifty years ago," says Mr. Lewis G. O'Shields, of Portersville, Ala., "my mother gave me the first dose of Black-Draught, and I have taken it ever since, when I needed a medicine for constipation. I have used this remedy all my married life, in raising my children.

"I have used Black-Draught for heartburn, as I have had spells of this kind, off and on, for years. This follows indigestion, and indigestion comes close on constipation.

"I have found that the best way to head off trouble is to begin taking Black-Draught in time. It relieves me of dizziness, tightness in the chest and backache.

"By getting rid of impurities, Black-Draught helps to keep the system in good order. I always keep it in the home, and have recommended it to many people, in my time."

TAKING TO THE AIR

The American public is taking to the air.

Last year 90,000 persons made scheduled trips on passenger planes—double the 1928 number, and more will ride this year.

The people are becoming air-minded. The airplane has ceased to be a novelty and has taken its place along with railroads, buses and automobiles as a standard mode of transportation.

Little more than a year has passed since the modern passenger transport planes came into use. They are models of comfort, speed and dependability.

Who can wonder that they are a popular means of travel?

Fine Picnic Enjoyed Near Maplesville

A most enjoyable picnic was given on May 30 by the Coburn, Foshier, Ramsey and Perry families; also Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kanipe and Mrs. S. S. portas. All met at the Motley bridge over big Mulberry creek. Some of the party tried their luck at fishing, others sat around and chatted. At eleven o'clock a fire was made, spring chicken and ham were fried; ice tea made, baskets were emptied of a quantity of most delicious food—such a jolly time all had during the whole meal. The cooking was superintended by Mrs.

Kanipe and Miss Annie Perry; cook vessels being the property of Mrs. Kanipe. These vessels have been handed down in the Shepherd family, of which she is a branch. Little Nose-to-Mouth Lines
Can Be Massaged And
"Smiled" Away

SOME people make the mistake of calling the droopy little lines that form from nose to mouth "laugh wrinkles." But these lines do not appear because we laugh too much—they often come because we do not smile enough.

In order to smooth away these droopy lines, it is necessary first of all to tone up the relaxed muscles by nature's own method—the smiling habit. By that I do not mean that you must go around with a grin on your face all the time, for you can learn to lift your mouth corners without smiling broadly. Practice making pleasant faces instead of sad ones.

I also want to tell you about a few simple massage movements that will accomplish wonders with the little nose-to-mouth lines. Of course your face must be perfectly clean before you begin, so with gentle upward motions spread cleansing cream all over your face and neck, and then wipe it off with fluffy cleansing tissues. After the cleansing cream has been removed, whisk little pads of cotton saturated with a slightly astringent skin tonic over your face. This will remove all traces of the cleansing cream.

Now for the droopy lines: Dip your index and middle finger tips into tissue cream or skin food. If your skin is normal or inclined to be oily, use tissue cream, but if your face is dry, use skin food. And if your face is plump, even if your skin is dry, choose tissue cream, because it is non-fattening. Smooth the cream over your face, especially around your nose and mouth. Be careful not to press hard with your finger tips, and do not pull the skin.

Then when your face is well coated with cream, dip your finger tips into muscle oil. Placing the middle and index fingers of each hand at the corners of your upper lip, gently smooth outward toward your cheeks. Repeat these smoothing movements again and again—until the droopy places come alive, and you feel a real tendency to smile, and lift up those tired, lax muscles. As your finger tips stroke gently across these lines, smoothing them away gradually, the rich, slightly astringent muscle oil acts like hundreds of little fingers patting and smoothing your face.

And the skin food or tissue cream softens your skin, and blends with your skin's natural oils. If you take this treatment just before you go to bed, it is beneficial to leave the cream and oil on your skin all night, unless your skin is abnormally oily. But if you take this facial during the day, remove all the cream and oil by the same basic cleansing with which you started.

Seeing Big League

BASEBALL

The queerest bit of twirling I ever saw in 22 years as a big league umpire marked the debut of Ray Keating, a clever spitball pitcher, who enjoyed only a very short career in the majors compared with that of Ed Walsh. Strangely enough, this setting also was in St. Louis.

New York was playing St. Louis and the latter team was leading by a 10-5 score. In the first of the eighth, the Yankees used a pinch hitter for the pitcher and Keating was delegated to finish the inning.

Keating made a most unusual debut. He gave three bases on balls and struck out three men, the count on every batter was three balls and two strikes, when he either received a base on balls or struck out. He walked the first, third and fifth batter. There was plenty of drama when the sixth batter faced him with the bases piled, the second and fourth having scored.

Getting the count to three balls and two strikes he put two over, the batsman fouling both. The next pitch was one of those doubtful ones, just at the knee or below. It was a spitball. At such times, the spitball is a most disconcerting delivery for the umpire. Often a ball that crosses the plate at the knee, then, so breaks that the catcher receives it much below that point.

The batsman thought the pitch was low and took it. I thought otherwise and called it a strike, retiring the side. Naturally the batsman was much disappointed, as well as utterly disgusted at my ruling, and didn't refrain from saying so. No doubt by this time some of the fan readers have wondered why I didn't pick out a no-hit, no-run game, when discussing remarkable pitching feats.

Fate plays a certain part in every no-hit game. Fate can frown as well as smile, for I have seen many a pitcher robbed of a no-hit record with two down in the ninth, only to have a fluky hit go safe. Yet, there is a certain no-hit game that is indelibly written on my mem-

The engine, chassis and radiator should be attended to according to the particular needs of the car, but batteries should be watered at least once every two weeks, and tires gauged and checked at least once a week.

Water and oil are two of the worst enemies of the fabric, and, for this reason small stone cuts in the casing should be kept filled with some good tire filler. Oil will ruin an inner tube in a week. Never throw the extra inner tubes in promiscuously with the greasy rags and oil can. Wrap them carefully in cloth, or better still, get a couple of good, strong cloth bags for them.

ory. It was superb bit of pitching against one of the hardest hitting teams in the annals of baseball. Detroit was the victim, Charley Robertson, then just a recruit pitcher of the Chicago White Sox, turned the trick. It was in the spring of 1922. Robertson was comparatively unknown; The Detroit club was regarded as a pennant possibility. There came to the majors, with Robertson, a rumor that he "doctored" the ball.

In the first four innings Detroit sluggers hit a half dozen balls hard but always directly at some fielder. The Tigers were peeved. Unable to get the ball safe they began to look for an alibi. The contention was raised that Robertson was "doing something funny" to the ball, doctoring it.

From the fourth inning on, the Tigers paid far more attention to taking issue with the legality of Robertson's pitching than trying to hit the ball. The White Sox recruit merely smiled, tossing the ball to the umpire for inspection every time the Detroit batters complained.

Realizing the value of psychology and knowing the Detroit club was paying close attention to his every action, Robertson decided to play on their emotions.

Often before delivering the ball he would carefully scan the cover. Occasionally he would hold the ball in one hand and pass the other hand over and over as if smoothing down or making a rough spot. He would toss the ball in the air as if testing its weight. He did any number of other fool things, to further excite the curiosity of the Tigers.

How well he succeeded in his efforts is shown by the box score of that game. Detroit was blanked without a hit or run, not a man reaching first base.

That was a great exhibition of pitching, principally because it was a no-hit, no-run game in which not a batter reached first. However, the remarkable part of that game was the fact that Robertson's pitching improved the more the Detroit club sought to harass him.

Baseball at Night May Soon

Be Played in Major Leagues

Night baseball will find its way into the major leagues if it proves a financial success in the minors, Sam Brendon, president of the St. Louis Cardinals, said.

"Personally, I can see no reason why fans in major league cities would not turn out for the night contests just as they now are doing in Des Moines and other cities," Brendon said.

"The attendance difficulties probably would be partly solved, at least."

Brendon points out, however, that crowds now turning out for the night games may decrease after the novelty wears off, but he believed fans would become accustomed to the flood lights and the game would be played as well as in daylight.

BILL, THE

BUS DRIVER

SAYS

"There's a difference between an excuse and a reason. You can find plenty excuses, but not one bloomin' reason for bein' careless."

(By MARCUS A. DOW.)

If there's any one kind of a hick answerin' to the name of dryin' fool it's the bird who waves alibi at you whenever he gets in dutch and has an accident.

A party of my more or less remote acquaintance parked his speed huggy at the curb and went into a house. While he was gone it rolled away and collided with a sedan. In the sedan was a lady about thirty years old. She was a good lookin' dame, fair complexioned, brown hair and a cheery smile'n sort of face that spread sunshine wherever she went. Her sedan got a nasty rap and a piece of jagged glass cut a deep ugly gash on her pretty cheek, disfigurin' her for life. I wonder how does that thoughtless lunatic that left his car parked in an unsafe manner feel about it down in his heart?

In his insurance report he wrote, "While I was in the house the brakes on my car let go, which was the cause of the accident." Don't his alibi give you a laugh? As if that tin can of his had some ghostly power enabling it to let go and start up of its own free will and ram another car. Now you know and I know his brakes didn't just let go. The fact is this guy parked on a grade, forgot to cut his wheels to the curb, and left his engine running! The vibration of the engine jurred the brakes loose and that old bus of his rolled down hill. A natural outcome of this guy's damfool carelessness.

I heard of a guy workin' on a railroad who turned in an accident report like this, "John Smith, brakeman, got bit on the end of the finger while trying to spit tobacco juice down a rattlesnake's throat." In answer to the question, "Who was to blame for the accident?" was written, "The rattlesnake."

Drivin' a bus or auto careless like the same as teasin' a rattlesnake. Don't blame the snake if it bites you. And believe me, I know a lot of folks this kick in the shins is meant for.

Pathetic Reunion That

Has Film Outclassed

Stranger than fiction and more moving than a film is a story which comes from Saint Omer, France. The scene is a cafe at Quivrehain. Among the customers is an elderly woman. A miner enters. He has a story to tell. He relates how his father abandoned his mother in this very same village of Quivrehain in 1885, and took him to America when he was three years of age. His father died shortly after his arrival, and he was adopted by Poles, who made a miner of him. Eventually he returned to France, working in a pit at Henles and passing as a Polish miner. The elderly woman put questions, and the miner was astonished when the woman jumped up in great excitement and declared that he was not a Pole, but a Frenchman, and that he was her son, taken from her 44 years ago.

OLD DOCTOR'S IDEA

IS BIG HELP TO

ELDERLY PEOPLE

In 1885, old Dr. Caldwell made a discovery for which elderly people the world over praise him today! Years of practice convinced him that many people were endangering their health by a careless choice of laxatives. So he began a search for a harmless prescription which would be thoroughly effective, yet would neither gripe nor form any habit. At last he found it. Over and over he wrote it, when he found people bilious, headachy, out of sorts, weak or feverish; with coated tongue, bad breath, no appetite or energy. It relieved the most obstinate cases, and yet was gentle with women, children and elderly people.

Today the same famous, effective prescription, known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is the world's most popular laxative. It may be obtained from any druggist.

Supreme Court Sustains Local Verdict

Virgil Bouldin were not sitting in the case.

The case represents mandamus action by Lett to compel the Chilton County Republican Executive Committee to place his name as a candidate, on the county primary ballot, despite his refusal to comply with the executive committee's rule that all candidates, in order to participate in the primary, must state under oath how they voted in the last election. Decision in the lower court went against him, and he appealed.

It is generally understood that the rulings of the Supreme Court in the Lett case, would operate to defeat any attempt of a "bolter" candidate, by mandamus, to compel the State Democratic Executive Committee to place such a candidate's name on the official democratic primary election ballot.

In his opinion in the Lett case, Justice Gardner holds without merit, the insistence by counsel for Lett that the test oath in question is violative of the preservation of the secrecy of the ballot as prescribed by statute.

Holding unsound the argument that the test oath requirement is an arbitrary and unreasonable exercise of the committee's power, the opinion states that political parties are voluntary organizations and their objects "intimate to those who compose them." They are not governmental agencies, it is ruled.

"The Chilton County Republican Executive Committee called a primary election to be held with the State Primary Election on August 12, 1930." In the call resolution all qualified voters, regardless of past party affiliations, and who believe in the principles of the Republican party and pledge themselves to support the nominees of such party in the primary were invited to participate.

"But as to one desiring to become a candidate there was an additional requirement that he state 'under oath how he or she voted in the last general election of 1928, that is, whether said proposed candidate supported the Republican ticket or the Democratic ticket, or voted a split ticket.' This oath was required to be filed with the chairman and kept on file open to inspection as well as published in a newspaper published in said county. M. F. Lett desired to become a candidate in said primary for the office of member of the Board of Education of Chilton County, and complied with all requirements of said executive committee as to such candidacy save one. He declined to make the oath above outlined. For his declination to conform to this requirement the chairman refused to certify his name as a candidate for said office, and this mandamus proceeding was resorted to for the purpose of compelling such certification.

"That petitioner has pursued the proper remedy is clear and indeed not here controverted.—18 R. C. L. 273; Ex parte Jackson, 103 So. 558; State v. Board, 180 Ala. 489.

It is first insisted that particular feature of the resolution requiring such oath is invalid and should therefore be disregarded in that it is a violation of the secrecy of the ballot guaranteed to the voter by the laws of the State, as disclosed by a consideration of sections 493, 505, 506, 507, 627, 3916, and 3924. Code 1923, with particular references to section 627. The question of the right of secrecy of the ballot was discussed and many authorities cited in Ex parte Owen, 148 Ala. 402, construing the statute there involved—as relating to section 179 of our Constitution. It was held in the Owen case that the extent of the preservation of secrecy of the ballot was a matter of legislative policy and by section 652, Code, 1923, disclosure is expressly permitted in a contest."

"But a review of the numerous authorities upon the subject is here unnecessary. Our statutes clearly contemplate the preservation of the secrecy of the ballot in a primary election as disclosed by the language of Section 627, supra. 'The ballot of every voter shall be kept secret and inviolate.'

Committee Has Rights

"In Section 672, Code, 1923, it is provided that 'any executive committee of a party may fix assessments or other qualifications as it may deem necessary for persons desiring to become candidates for nomination to office at a primary election.'

"That a test by a political organization of party affiliation and party fealty is reasonable and proper to be prescribed for those participating in its primary elections for nomination of candidates for office is well nigh universally recognized.—9 R. C. L. pp. 89; 20 C. J. pp. 115-16, and 125; Merriam and Overacker Primary Elections pp. 69-73 and 124-5; Kelson vs. Cook (Ind.) Ann. Cas. 1918-E 68. Baer vs. Gore (W. Va.) L. R. A. 1917-B 723; State vs. Felton, 12, Amer. and Eng. Ann. Cases 65; House vs. Thompson, 228 111, 552.

"It is equally well settled that such a test in no manner violates statutory provisions for the secrecy of the ballot, for as has been well said, 'it is the secrecy of the ballot which the law protects and not secrecy as to the political party with which the voters intend to act.'—9 R. C. L. p. 1077; State vs. Blairdell, 24 L. B. A. N. S. 466; State vs. Flaherty, 41 L. R. A. N. S. 132; Kelson vs. Cook, supra.

During the past few weeks, in which several fires have occurred here, the firemen have had to contend with people rushing to and fro trying to find out where the fire is, and in doing this have been in the way of the truck. It would be much better to wait until the truck has passed and then follow it to the fire.

An accident, which could have been very serious, was narrowly averted last week, when an automobile drove out in front of the truck, and it can be truthfully said that if the fire truck should happen to hit a car, it would be just too bad for the car and the driver. Some trouble was also encountered by the firemen last Monday night at the Hodges store fire by spectators.

The full co-operation of every citizen of Clanton is asked by the volunteer firemen, and will be greatly appreciated.

Over ten thousand large handbills have been mailed out over this entire trade territory telling of the bargains this store is offering, and it is creating quite a bit of interest here.

The sale will continue for several days, but those contemplating attending it are urged to be there early, so that they will be able to get in on the first pick of bargains and prices.

Interesting Reports Read Concerning Various Accomplishments

The Isabella Chapter of the Future Farmers of America, of the Isabella Community, west of Clanton held a Father and Son meeting last Saturday night in the form of a banquet in the home economics department of the Isabella school. Each member of the club invited his father or mother to be their guests, while the honorary members present were Mr. H. R. Odum and Prof. J. D. Griffin, principal of the school. Specially invited guests were Rev. E. A. Childs, pastor of the Clanton Methodist church and B. Lawrence superintendent of education, who opened the banquet with invocation.

A very inspiring and interesting address was delivered by Rev. Childs to the young farmers of the club, in which he impressed the advantages of fair dealing toward fellowman. The address was thoroughly enjoyed by those present.

Oliver Manning, president of the club acted as toastmaster at the banquet, while Oswald Mims, another member, read a report of the various accomplishments of the club during the past several months. The club had drawn up a list of objectives last fall, and set out to accomplish them. Among the objectives prescribed was the reinforcing of the front of one of the main school buildings with a brick wall, to install a water system for the school, to plant shrubbery and undertake a general beautification program for the school grounds, installing electric lights and looking after and taking care of the school property in general. All of these objectives were successfully accomplished by the members of the club. The F. F. A. creed was read by R. Veazy, an active member, and short talks were made by Prof. Earle Thomas, as, vocational instructor of the school and by B. Lawrence. Some very inspiring closing remarks were made by Prof. Griffin.

The menu for the banquet was prepared by Mrs. Earl Thomas, who was assisted in the preparing and serving by Mrs. A. J. Lecroy, Misses Dorothy Manning, Elsie Conway and Myrtle, all of the Isabella Community.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTSLondon Naval Treaty Will Be Dealt With by Senate in Special Session.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

RATIFICATION or rejection of the London naval treaty will be accomplished by the senate in a special session, to be called by President Hoover immediately after the adjournment of congress about June 15. This was the plan decided upon by majority leaders of the senate and house with the approval of the President. It was considered best for congress to go ahead with the business before it adjourns and adjourn without touching up the treaty. The house leaders said they were ready to set a date for ending the session as soon as the senate was prepared for such a step. Opposition to hasty action on the treaty, by opponents of the pact, and a desire on the part of members of the house to get through and go home were two of the major reasons for the decision reached. President Hoover's announcement that he intended to call a special session, if necessary, to insure early action on the treaty was a principal factor.

Senators Johnson of California and Hale of Maine, leaders of the opposition, were especially vehement in their objections to what they called an attempt to railroad the pact through by administration senators. After the program adopted, the tariff, customs and harbors, omnibus and veterans bills will be acted on in the senate before congress adjourns.

More members of the navy general board and other high officers of the navy appeared before the senate committee on foreign relations and naval affairs to tell why they consider the London treaty dangerous for the United States. Much of their testimony was to the effect that it would make it impossible for the navy to protect this country's trade routes; there also was further criticism of the reduction in the number of large cruisers for America and of the increased ratio given Japan.

DEBATE on the conference report on the tariff bill was just getting under way in the senate when some were raised a point of order which was sustained by Vice President Curtis and under which the measure was sent back to conference. Consequently final action on the bill was delayed for at least one week.

The point of order related to a clause in the flexible provision permitting the tariff commission to make effective changes in duties if the President failed either to approve or disapprove a recommendation for an increase or decrease within 60 days. Republican leaders were concerned over the fact that several additional points of order may be made relating to rate items. If these are sustained further delays are in prospect.

FIGURES presented to the senate campaign expenditures committee revealed that Senator Grundy of Pennsylvania spent $291,000 out of his own pocket in his losing campaign for re-election and that the total cost of that campaign was $332,076. Secretary of Labor Davis, who defeated Grundy, had pledged out of his own funds $10,541.45. He said he also handed about $10,000 in contributions to his campaign which he turned over to his committee.

Francis H. Bohlen, who ran against

Senator Grundy and Secretary Davis with the backing of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, testified that the total expended for the ticket which included himself and candidates for governor and lieutenant governor was a little more than $200,000. Of this amount $10,000 was contributed by the association.

SOME of the dry leaders in the senate were considerably more disturbed by the ruling of the Supreme Court, that the ordinary purchaser of intoxicating liquor is not guilty of an offense, than was the prohibition enforcement bureau. Senator Sheppard of Texas, for instance, urged the early enactment of legislation to make the liquor buyer punishable under the dry laws. Sheppard was co-author of the Eighteenth amendment. Early in the present session he introduced a bill to make the seller and purchaser of illicit liquor equally liable to punishment. Senator Jones of Washington, author of the "five and ten law," and others opposed the views of Sheppard.

The court, in an important test case brought by the government, held that congress not only "deliberately and designedly" exempted purchasers in the Volstead act, but for ten years "has significantly left the law in its original form."

Enforcement bureau officials pointed out that the decision was entirely in accord with the policy the bureau had followed.

OUT in Seattle a federal grand jury returned indictments against Roy C. Lyle, prohibition administrator for Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana and Alaska, and others on charges of corruption and bribery. Among the indicted are William M. Whitney, Mr. Lyle's assistant and legal advisor; Earl Corwin, a prohibition agent; M. L. Fryant, a deputy sheriff who won notoriety as a wire tapper in the famous Olmsted "whispering wires" case, and C. T. McKinney, a young lawyer from Kentucky who led the prosecution of the Olmsted liquor gang.

OFFICIALS of the Methodist board of temperance, prohibition and public morals were asked to appear before the senate lobby committee to explain its alleged failure to report, in accordance with the federal corrupt practices act, its activities in the Presidential campaign of 1928.

Deets Pickett, research secretary of the board, testifying in the absence of Dr. Clarence True Wilson, its general secretary, insisted that its activities in behalf of Hoover were "nonpolitical." He pointed out that the Department of Justice has declined to prosecute the board for noncompliance with the federal statute.

Pickett stated that hundreds of thousands of copies of the Voice and the Clippings, organs of the board, attacking Al Smith's prohibition record, were circulated during the 1928 campaign; that the religious issue received attention in the Voice, a fact he now deplored; and that, as reported to the board by Doctor Wilson after the campaign, "we did use all the energy that we were capable of in bringing about the election of Herbert Hoover as President and Charles Curtis as Vice President."

"PASSIVE" no longer describes the resistance of the Indian natives to British rule. The rioting is increasing daily and has developed into bloody conflicts with the police and the troops. What is worse, in the eyes of the British, is the fact that the Moslems are joining their traditional enemies, the Hindus, in the campaign in some localities, though in other places there have been sanguinary fights between natives of the two religions.

Worst of all the rioting, but not directly connected with the Indian campaign, was that in Rangoon. In that capital city of Burma warfare broke out between different bands of coolies when laborers were imported to break a strike of dock workers, and the troops were forced to fire on the mobs. Many were killed and the wounded numbered perhaps a thousand. Latest reports indicated that peace had not yet been restored there. Fifteen Indian coolie women were said to have been tortured and massacred by coolies. All the shops in the city were closed and the food situation was becoming desperate.

CHINESE Nationalist forces in Honan province are reported to have been severely defeated by the troops of the northern alliance commanded by Yen Hsi-shan and Peng Yu-hsian and numbering about 200,000 men. The government troops were forced to dig in and suspend their advance on Chengchow, the rebel base, until reinforcements arrive. The two armies have been engaged in battle along the railway south of the Yellow river since May 8.

ORGANIZED labor won a big victory when the Supreme Court of the United States upheld an injunction restraining the Texas and New Orleans railroad, a Southern Pacific system subsidiary, from organizing a so-called "company union" or interfering with the activities of the Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks among its employees.

DETERMINED to hold down government expenditures for veterans' relief to reasonable figures, President Hoover vetoed a bill broadening the basis for pensions for Spanish war veterans which would have added from $11,000,000 to $12,000,000 to annual costs to the government.

"I am in favor of properly discharging the national obligation to men who served in war or became disabled and are in need," said the President in his veto message. "But certain principles are included in this legislation which are opposed to the interest both of war veterans and of the public."

CAPT. ROSCOE TURNER, flying a Lockheed Vega monoplane, set a new record for the east to west transcontinental flight. FRENCH INDO-CHINA Throne Room Building of King of Cambodia at Phnompenh.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

FRANCE has recently found it necessary to send a punitive expedition across the border that lies between Indo-China and China because of the activities of Chinese Communists along the frontier.

The expedition operated from Toungking, northernmost of the French coastal colonies, but the step was taken as a protection for the whole of French Indo-China, that stretches from the southeastern corner of Asia some 800 miles to the north and northward. It is a sizable empire which France controls there in Asia, either by outright possession or protectorate—265,000 square miles, an area almost exactly the size of the state of Texas. The region is, however, much closer to the equator than Texas, occupying a position corresponding to that of southern Mexico and Central America.

Thus the French Asiatic empire is wholly within the tropics and in a region of heavy rainfall. The units of French Asia are Cochinchina, in the extreme south; Cambodia, in the southwest; Annam, stretching along most of the eastern coast; Laos, inland and to the northwest; and Tongking, filling the northern end of the elongated territory and extending from the coast inland for 200 miles.

Annam is less completely under French control, officially, than any of the other states with which it is associated in the territorial group known as French Indo-China. It has its own emperor and is listed as a protectorate. But Annam and the twelve million people of Annamese blood really constitute the chief factor in this region of French influence. In few places are the old forms of oriental magnificence maintained as completely as in the imperial establishment at Hue, the capital of Annam. Until recently the palace was forbidden ground, and it is still far from easy to obtain access.

Inside the palace walls is a richness and an elaborateness seldom encountered outside fairy tales and the settings of extravagant stage presentations. There are picturesque gardens; paved courts, where on occasion the thousand mandarins of Annam strike their foreheads in unison on the ground before the emperor; dim corridors of countless columns with their huge perfume burners sending up continual clouds of incense; and exquisite rooms of intricately wrought ceramics and gold and silver. Opening into the emperor's state rooms is the great Golden Door, through which, in addition to the sovereign, only the extraordinary ambassadors may pass.

Hue itself Not Beautiful.

Outside the palace enclosure Hue is less appealing. The "metropolitan area" of the city is in large part a collection of native villages clustered in the shadow of the great palace-citadel walls. Across the river is the French residency with its Gallic-western atmosphere. For a long time Hue was little known, and as the seat of an important country its size was exaggerated. Its population is only about 60,000.

The town is in a tropical region in a latitude corresponding to the southern extremity of Mexico. It lies near the mid-point of the long double-curving coast of French Indo-China, a few miles from the sea on the Hue river. Built on a flat, the city itself has little beauty of form or setting; but it would be difficult to find in the tropics more beautiful environs than it possesses. Only a few miles away rise the mountains from which the Hue river flows, and even closer are lower wooded hills and valleys.

The most remarkable feature of Hue are the famous tombs of the kings, which lie in the charming pine and banyan-covered valleys and hills a few miles from the city—true cities of the dead, far more attractive in setting than that of the living. For each departed ruler of the past several centuries a large area has been developed as a resting place and memorial for himself, his wives, children and servants. These developed areas are in two parts. One is a beautiful group of gardens, lakes, summer-houses and a memorial hall. The latter is fitted with the furniture from the departed emperor's apartments. The second part is a vast enclosure near-by, usually a series of terraces above the gardens, in some unmarked spot of which the body of the emperor lies. The reigning emperor visits each of these garden-tombs of his ancestors annually and makes obeisance to their spirits.

The notable structures and gardens extend from the end of the Eighteenth century to the present.

Cambodia's Capital.

Strikingly different from Hue is Phnompenh, capital of Cambodia. It lies on the route to the famous ruins of Angkor and is better known to tourists than some of the larger capitals of Indo-China.

The palace of the kings of Cambodia is not elaborate. The royal dwelling place, in fact, is a series of rather modest buildings, not richly adorned without or within. Greatest of the palace sights is a life-size gold statue of Buddha in a room whose floor is of silver tiles.

Five or six hundred female retainers occupy the royal colony, among whom are the dancing girls. They, in their golden gowns, royal jewels, and tiaras that resemble miniature carved steeples, have become famous for their charm and grace.

The one thoroughfare of Phnompenh that has a right to be called an avenue leads from the palace to the public park. Two hotels bordering it offer excellent accommodations for a small Eastern city save for their orchestras that dispense impossible nocturnal jazz. The rest of the street is cluttered up with open-front native shops, some of which make an attempt to duplicate French pastry. Now and then through a vacant space one gets a glimpse of a garden spot a block or two in the background where a French colonial official lives in a palatial home amid broad lawns and flowering trees.

Hanoi, the "Paris of Asia."

The administrative center of all French Indo-China, and the capital as well of Tongking, is Hanoi which has been dubbed "the Paris of Asia." It bears many of the earmarks of the European capital.

A modern train brings you into a modern railway station at Hanoi. There you may hail a shiny new French-made automobile with a French chauffeur. In a tour of the city you ride along wide streets and boulevards bearing French names and pass imposing French buildings, and spacious parks where stroll French women and men; some of the latter dressed in the natty blue uniforms of the French army.

In the business district, Parisian gowns are displayed behind plate-glass show windows. French theater fronts blaze with gaudy signs to attract patrons. Paris-like sidewalk cafes invite passersby to imbibe their favorite beverage while melodious strains from a French orchestra filter through the open windows of a French restaurant.

Now and then you bump over street car tracks. You notice the absence of peculiar oriental city odors because of Hanoi's modern sewage system; you feel free to drink the city water because of the excellent water supply system; and at night the streets are bathed in light from thousands of electric bulbs. The Botanical gardens and Zoological park are additional reminders of the French capital about 7,000 miles away.

The French quarter is farthest from the right bank of the Red river on which Hanoi lies about 80 miles from the sea. A lake, surrounded by promenades, separates this quarter from the native quarter which begins on the congested riverside. Once inside the narrow byways of the native quarter, it is easy to forget the westernized portion of the city.

Bean Beetle Control

By C. E. Stapp

Many are making inquiry about the methods of controlling the bean beetle. A large number of farmers in the county who have followed the right directions in the use of Magnesium Arsenate have reported complete control of the beetle.

For effective results put 1 oz. of magnesium arsenate in a vessel and add a small amount of water to first make a paste, then add water slowly, and stir so as to dissolve the poison, until you have 3 gallons. After your solution is properly made put it in air pressure pump, get plenty of pressure on the pump and spray the under side of the leaves thoroughly. Keep the poison in your pump well mixed by frequent shaking. Spray at least once each week and more often if it is rainy weather.

SUMMER IS THE TIME FOR HEALTH

By Dr. Christmas Seal
Summer is a fine time for the run-down child to build up ready for school. The Tuberculosis Associations and the Health Agencies of Alabama are promoting summer camps. A summer at Camp will work wonders. The run-down child needs the change a camp provides. There is enough play, plenty of rest, lots of food, regular hours, freedom from school duties, everything that tends to build youth.

Many of these camps are paid for by your contribution you made last December when you purchased Christmas Seals, and Dr. Christmas Seal wants you to know that you have a part in the rebuilding of lives, the saving of some child from tuberculosis. Support and encourage the operation of summer camps. Visit them, see youth develop. Suggest names of boys and girls who should attend camp to those in charge. Camp children will be better fitted for school next fall, there will be less sickness, less absence—summer camps are well worth while. Children at Camp drink milk every day. They like it best through a straw.

Dr. Christmas Seal suggests that when you can not have perfect health it is fine to have the best health you can. A cheerful spirit helps.

Cathartics do not cure constipation. Cut out pills and eat greens, bran, and other roughage. Drink a lot of water.

SOME FAVORITE RECIPES

By NELLIE MAXWELL

The most loveable quality that any human being can possess is tolerance. It is the vision that enables one to see things from another's point of view. It is the quality that conceals to others the right to their own opinions and their own peculiarities. It is the bigness that enables us to let people be happy in their own way instead of our way.—Rotary Bulletin.

Let us not forget the value of fruits and vegetables in our menus.

Banana Supreme.—Peel, scrape and cut four bananas crosswise into quarters. Put one-half cupful of nuts (walnuts, pecans or almonds) in a blender or food chopper with four graham crackers.

Mix with one-third of a cupful of brown sugar, one-eighth teaspoonful of nutmeg. Roll the bananas in this and lay close together in a buttered pan. Bake 20 minutes. Serve with whipped cream.

Maid of Honor.—Beat two eggs with one-half cupful of sugar until light, then add two cupfuls of cottage cheese, two tablespoonfuls of cream, one-half cupful of seedless raisins, one teaspoonful of lemon peel, one tablespoonful of lemon juice, two tablespoonfuls of chopped almonds. Put a spoonful of the filling into individual tart pans lined with rich pastry and bake in a moderately hot oven.

Apple Fluff.—Peel, core and cut up three large apples, simmer with just enough water to cook without burning. Soften one and one-half tablespoonfuls of gelatin in one cupful of water, then heat until well dissolved. Add the grated rind and two tablespoonfuls of juice of lemon, with one-third of a cupful of maple sirup to the apples which have been previously put through a sieve. Cool, and when beginning to set, beat until light. Add the stiffly beaten whites of two eggs folded gently into the mixture. Turn into a mold which has been rinsed in cold water and chill. Serve with a custard made of the egg yolks, or cream may be used as a sauce.

Potenta With Sausages.—Sprinkle one and one-half cupfuls of corn meal into a quart of boiling salted water, stirring and cooking for 20 minutes.

HOW TO COOK OKRA

Select young okra, wash it well, and cut crosswise in pieces about 1/2 inch thick. Heat the fat in a heavy skillet, add the okra, cover, cook for 10 minutes, and stir frequently to prevent burning. Remove the cover, continue to cook until the okra is tender and lightly browned, and serve at once.

2 quarts okra Salt to taste
4 lbs. fat

Okra is one of the vegetables which, after being used chiefly in a limited locality, suddenly began to find its way all over the United States, due to better marketing and storage facilities. One result has been that many people are not quite sure how to cook it when they see it offered for sale. In the South, there are numerous ways for okra, and various methods of preparing it. Here is one of the best. The recipe is furnished by the bureau of home economics:

Now add one pound of sausage meat which has been well cooked and broken into small bits. Stir it into the corn meal and pour into a mold to cool. Unmold, cover with tomato sauce and cheese and bake half an hour in a moderate oven.

Here is something different to serve with a lamb roast instead of the usual mint jelly: Cut grapefruit into halves and remove every other section, in the cavity place a wedge shaped piece of mint jelly. Mold the jelly in one-half grapefruit shell and the wedges will be of the same size. These are delicious substitutes for a fruit cocktail when serving lamb or fowl.

Bake small cup cakes, spread with jelly and roll in coconut. These make very nice little cakes to serve with a cup of tea.

Rhubarb Betty.—Mix one quart of dry bread crumbs with one-fourth of a cupful of melted butter. Place a layer of sweetened rhubarb sauce in a baking dish and cover with the buttered crumbs; repeat, adding a dash of cinnamon or nutmeg until one quart of sauce and all the crumbs are used. Bake fifteen minutes. The fresh rhubarb may be used, adding sugar for each layer and baking twenty-five minutes. Serve with a hard sauce.

Peach Delight.—Cream two tablespoonfuls of butter with one cupful of sugar and add the yolks of two eggs lightly beaten. Now add one pint of whipping cream beaten stiff and one quart of sliced peaches. Serve over sliced angel food or sponge cake.

Jellied Custard With Peaches.—Prepare the following custard and mold: Take one tablespoonful of gelatin, soften in one and one-half pints of milk, heat to boiling and pour over the beaten yolks of three eggs and one-half cupful of sugar, one-fourth teaspoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of almond; cook well, adding the almond after the mixture is taken from the stove. Fold in the beaten whites and turn into a large mold. When chilled serve with sliced peaches and cream.

Asparagus Wholesome

Asparagus, freshly cut and immediately served is a wholesome and appetizing product of the garden. As it is one of the earliest green vegetables it is especially enjoyed.

Wild asparagus, which is often found growing on the farm, may be used by the housewife. It furnishes nourishment for the family which would otherwise be used by the plant in the growth of its stalk and leaves.

For green asparagus the shoots are cut near the surface of the soil, while for white asparagus the shoots are cut several inches below the surface as soon as the tops appear.

Story for Children at Bedtime

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

"My seasons," Saturn told Harry, "are like yours in their degrees of warmth, mild weather, and so forth—only every one of my seasons lasts seven years."

"Do you mean seven years of winter and seven years of spring and seven years of summer and so on?" asked Harry.

"Just what I mean," said Saturn. "Glad you get the idea at once."

"Do you find anyone grumbling over having a season last so long? Now if we have too long a winter or too long a spring people grumble."

"I never hear complaints," Harry had hoped from the way in which he had put his question that Saturn would give himself away and answer that having no people on his planet there could be no complaints. But Saturn's eyes twinkled as he answered, for he knew what was in Harry's mind. However, Harry was just about certain that there was no life here. From the look of what he could see he could tell that it was very hot and that it was not like his earth where so many creatures lived.

It was the strangest thing—but at this moment Cosmo arrived with the plane. How well they were going to guard their secrets! Harry said good-by to Saturn hurriedly for Cosmo said they mustn't be late.

"Don't forget to look at my rings through a telescope next time you get a chance," Saturn called out. "Sorry I couldn't have shown them to you here, but on account of going around me—" Harry did not hear the end of the sentence. For they were flying once more.

He made himself quite at home in the plane now. He looked at some of the charts as he ate sandwiches.

"Well! just whiz by Uranus," said Cosmo. "He's next to the most distant planet and you can't see him without a telescope. You're always asking about life on the planets. Of course they wonder most about Mars and a little about Venus, but I will tell you that there's no life on Uranus—nor on Neptune. Both are too hot. Stars are also too hot.

"Uranus was named after an ancient god. A brilliant man named

Ice Should Not Be Wrapped

ICE UNWRAPPED ICE WRAPPED

Difference in Temperature in Two Boxes.

Wrapping may save ice, (a cent a day), but it does not save food. Unwrapped ice melts slightly faster, therefore gives lower temperatures and furnishes surfaces for condensation of odors.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A better understanding of what goes on when we put ice and food into a refrigerator has led to an absolute repudiation of "ice blankets," or any sort of paper or cloth covering that retards the melting of the ice. It is true that wrapped ice does not melt as fast as unwrapped, but for that very reason it does not give as low temperatures in the refrigerator as unwrapped ice. In a good refrigerator the faster ice melts the lower the temperature of the air around it. More surface is also furnished by melting ice for the absorption of odors. The important thing in using a refrigerator is that it shall be possible to maintain temperatures low enough to safeguard milk and meat, especially since bacterial increase goes on very rapidly in these foods above certain temperatures. Below forty-five degrees is now considered proper for a 24-hour storage of milk and meat.

The diagram prepared by the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture shows the difference in temperature in two boxes, one with unwrapped ice and the other with wrapped ice. Currents of cold air move downward from the melting ice so that the place just below the ice on the floor of the refrigerator is the coldest spot. In the first case it is 42 degrees Fahrenheit in this part of the box and in the second, 43 degrees Fahrenheit.

In laboratory tests made by the bureau the total amount of ice saved in 24 hours by wrapping was two pounds, worth about one cent a day, but to save this small amount the housekeeper runs the risk of insufficient refrigeration and failure to have odors absorbed. These shortcomings defeat the entire purpose of refrigeration.

SOME HOUSEHOLD HINTS

Cheese is an excellent meat substitute because it is rich in protein and fat and contains calcium, phosphorus, and vitamin A.

Blankets should be hung for drying so the stripes are vertical. This prevents the brighter colors from running into the ground color.

To cut butter without having it stick to the knife, rinse the knife off with hot water first, or fold a piece of waxed paper over the sharp edge.

The miles she walks in her work, not to her work, are what make the housewife weary. Rearranging equipment will often reduce the distances.

Shoulder of Lamb Easily Boned

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A shoulder of lamb is one of the most tender and juicy cuts, but it is sometimes passed by because the housewife believes it will be difficult to carve. All of the bones can be easily removed, however, and the meat is then sliced without any trouble. The Bureau of Home Economics of the United States Department of Agriculture likes a boned shoulder to be stuffed and sewed up for baking in the form of a "cushion roast" rather than a rolled roast. Directions for taking the bones out properly are given by the Bureau of Animal Industry.

The first requisite is a sharp knife with a narrow blade about 4 or 5 inches long and half an inch wide. Do not keep this knife in a kitchen drawer among other kitchen tools, or where it is likely to be picked up for odd uses, like peeling potatoes or whittling.

Lamb shoulder, as cut for the retail trade, is almost as square and plump as a cushion. It contains four or five ribs, the shoulder blade, the round arm bone, and part of the neck. To bone it, lay the shoulder flat on the table with the fat side down and the rib side up. First, slip the knife under the edges of the ribs and follow down along them to the neck bone, leaving just as much meat as possible on the shoulder. Cut the ribs and the neck bones from the meat. Inside the shoulder there still remain the blade bone and the short end of the arm. The flat blade and the round arm bone form a sort of all that extends through the center of the shoulder. The edge of the blade bone can be seen on the rear of the shoulder, and the arm bone on the side toward the one who is cutting. Slip the knife deep into the meat along the top or smooth side of the shoulder blade. Continue the cut around the corner to the arm bone, raising a flap of lean meat that can be laid back far enough to expose the full length of the bones. Peel out the shoulder blade and arm bone. You now have a cushion of meat open on two adjacent sides with a large pocket to hold a tasty stuffing. Whether roasted with or without stuffing, the edges of the pocket should be sewed together before cooking.

JESUS IN THE SHADOW OF THE CROSS

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 26:1-48. GOLDEN TEXT—He went a little farther, and fell on his face, and prayed, saying, O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me: nevertheless not as I will, but as thou wilt.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Proves His Love for Us. JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Suffering for Us. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Agony in the Garden. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Gethsemane.

I. Plotting the Death of Jesus (vv. 1-5).

Christ with divine insight predicted not only the fact of His death, but its time and manner. The Jewish authorities in secret conference were plotting to silence His voice by putting him to death. In spite of themselves they were moving in the line of God's decree.

II. Mary of Bethany Anoints Jesus (vv. 6-13).

1. The meaning of the act (vv. 6, 7). This anointing occurred when Jesus was at meat in Simon's house. Mary had the keenest apprehension of the disciples. By sitting at His feet in loving fellowship, she obtained a grasp of truth which none of the other disciples had. She saw that His body was to be broken and that His precious life was to go out. She entered into fellowship with His sufferings and the joy of His resurrection.

2. The indignation of the disciples (vv. 8, 9). The action of the disciples is in strange contrast with Mary's love.

3. Mary defended by Christ (vv. 10-13).

Jesus could not allow His most appreciative disciple to lie under this charge, so He came to her rescue. As a result of Christ's defense, Judas is so stingingly rebuked that he hastens away to betray his Lord.

III. Jesus Betrayed (vv. 14-30).

1. The bargain of betrayal (vv. 14-16). Satan so completely had the mastery over Judas that he sold his Lord for the price of a slave (Ex. 21:32).

2. The betrayal announced (vv. 20-25).

While they were eating the Passover Jesus made this announcement. Who knows but that the reason for the announcement at this time was to give Judas an opportunity to repent. The sorrowful question in verse 22 indicates that the disciples did not seem to suspect one another, but directed personal attention to themselves.

IV. The Disciples Warned (vv. 31-35).

This took place as they walked from the upper room to the garden of Gethsemane. Jesus plainly told them, "All ye shall be offended because of me this night," quoting Zechariah 13:7 as proof. Though He told them of the darkness which was ahead, yet He gave them a glimpse of the coming light. He said, "After I am risen again I will go before you into Galilee."

V. Jesus Praying (vv. 36-46).

1. The place—the Garden of Gethsemane (v. 38). Gethsemane means oil press. It was a place some three-fourths of a mile east of Jerusalem, where oil was crushed out of the olives.

2. His companions (v. 37). Peter, James and John. The same disciples who had been with Him on the Mount of Transfiguration are permitted to go with Him into the deep shadow of the Garden. They slept while He prayed.

3. Jesus sorrowing even unto death (vv. 37, 38).

The cause of His suffering was not primarily physical, but spiritual. The physical is not to be minimized, but the burden of sin—the world's sin—was pressing heavily upon Him. He was being made sin for us (II Cor. 5:21).

4. The Prayer Itself (v. 39).

"O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me." What was this "cup"? It was not prayer to be delivered from the cross. The idea that He desired to escape from the cross and thus stop short of His redemptive work is not to be entertained. Redemption through the sacrifice of Himself was the supreme purpose of His coming into the world. The holiness and perfection of His nature moved Him to shrink from the mountain of sin which was resting upon Him. Though the cup was bitter, He bowed in submission to the Father's will.

An Important Power

Man has one power in particular which is not sufficiently dwelt on. It is the power of making the world happy, or at least of so greatly diminishing the amount of unhappiness in it as to make quite a different world from what it is at present. The power is called kindness.—F. W. Faber.

Embroidered Fabrics Are Popular

By JULIA BOTTOMLEY

these "dressy" afternoon occasions is the use of embroidered fabrics. It will be seen by the sketches herewith that we are slipping back gracefully to a dignifiedness, so far as materials are concerned, which for some time past has been omitted from the style program. We refer to the application of embroidery dress in decorative motifs on plain backgrounds, also embroidered eyelet effects.

For the costume to the left in the illustration the designer chooses one of the very new embroidered fabrics—crisp linen in this instance, the patterning worked in soft dune yarns of subtle luster and extremely clear and buoyant colors.

The formal afternoon frock to the left seen at Alken, where the sun shines brightly and garden parties are consequently in order, illustrates the revival of sheer batiste with eyelets embroidered in softly sparkling dune, which by the way is a new nationally used term referring to an improved method of mercerizing cotton. Durened cotton is stronger, more sparkling and more porous than ordinary cotton.

The use of the uneven peplum should be noted in the sketch at the right. It flares up in the front while the long skirt line remains even. The handkerchief cape is removable, leaving the frock with a definite sleeveless dinner-gown character.

These sketches point to more than one good fashion lesson—contrast in frocks and wraps for afternoon, both normal and high waistlines, hats, coats and shoes matching or their color harmonies contrasting the tone coloring of the costumes with which they are worn. Vogue for the hand bag, which is of the same material as one's gown, is accentuated in the figure to the right.

Fashions at afternoon parties and other daytime social affairs are resplendent with the motifs, fabrics, colors and the general gaiety so characteristic of the 1936 modes. An interesting trend observed at

Two rifle championships in the same family is the unusual record that has been achieved by Samuel A. McKone and his seventeen-year-old son, Samuel A. McKone, Jr. A few hours after the elder McKone had won the senior championship of the Kansas State Rifle association at Junction City, his son won the junior championship. The father's score was 243 out of a possible 250, while the son's was 193 out of a possible 200.

Dr. Jennie Callfas of Omaha, Neb., who was ousted as Democratic national committeewoman after she had refused to support Al Smith for President, is seeking the Democratic nomination for senator. Odd Architecture for Chicago Fair Architecture for the Century of Progress exposition in Chicago is going to be decidedly different from any that has ever been used. For example, this photograph of the model of one of the domes of the Travel and Transport building shows how cables on the outside will do away with the necessity of having pillars and posts on the inside. The men inspecting the model are Manager L. R. Lohr, Assistant Director of Works C. W. Farrier and Secretary Daniel H. Burnham.

BOLL WEEVIL CAUSES SHORT STAPLE COTTON

Concerning the reasons for this great increase in short staple and untenderable cotton, S. P. Storrs, commissioner of agriculture, who is a cotton raiser in Elmore County, said:

"Although Alabama farmers are being penalized in the world markets, because of their extremely short staple, there is a reason for this increasing tendency. The coming of the boll weevil and the necessity for a quickly growing variety to get ahead of the weevil caused the development of a very short staple length, known as Half and Half.

"This variety is always less than 7-8 length, ripens early, and because of the large amount of high priced seed is doubtless increasing in popularity in Alabama.

"It is well for farmers to remember that there is an increasing demand for longer staple cotton, instead of shorter staple cotton. On the contrary, farmers of Alabama and the U. S. are growing more and more of the shorter staple lengths. Longer staple cotton is needed in many places in our modern industrial life, and there is always a handsome premium paid on lengths of one inch or more.

"Whether Alabama farmers will change and grow longer staple remains to be seen. In any event, certain large tire companies are now growing their own cotton, in order to fill the demands for a long staple fiber which is strong and elastic."

STATE CAPITOL NEWS

Nearly eight times as many library units were purchased for Alabama schools in 1928-1929 as were purchased in 1920-1921. Not only were more books bought, but those purchased were made available to a larger number of children by means of the traveling library. This library on wheels is nothing more than a truck that transports books purchased by the county from one school to another.

In 1928 four counties—Calhoun, Etowah, Cullman, and Jefferson—were using these traveling libraries. When a truck for the purpose was not available, the books were exchanged by the supervisors and teachers, as was done in Clay, Conecuh, Elmore, Marengo, Lawrence, Cleburne, Sumter, and St. Clair counties two years ago. During the present year Randolph, Greene and Clark have added the circulating library, Randolph using the truck for the purpose, with a full-time librarian in charge.

The outstanding example of library facilities for rural children in Alabama is found in Walker county, where recently $25,000 was secured for the purpose of establishing a public library that will serve the schools. The books will be housed in a separate building. Full-time librarians will be employed, and special book centers will be established throughout the county. These will be served by the library truck. A special division of the library will be available for the negro schools.

An extension of library service to the hundreds of Alabama schools that yet have practically no books is one of the urgent needs at the present time.

Sale of farm products from the State Prison Farm near Atmore this year is approximately at least $160,000, according to figures from the State Convict Department. The Atmore farm was established by the present administration to provide an outlet for part of the convict labor removed from the coal mines in accordance with an act of the last legislature which abolished the convict lease system. The farm has been rapidly developed. Three crops, strawberries, cucumbers and potatoes, will bring in a total of around $100,000, and sale of cotton and other staple crops from this farm will swell the total to $160,000, it is estimated.

The strawberry crop, although short this year, owing to unfavorable weather conditions, was sold for approximately $40,000; cucumbers, $20,000, and the sale of Irish potatoes will be around $40,000, with some 85 carloads of potatoes expected to be marketed by the time the season is ended. In addition to potato sales, enough potatoes of below the best grade will be kept to supply the needs of all the various State prisons through next winter. A canning plant at the prison is also busily employed in canning snap beans, which will be an item in cutting down food costs for prisoners.

Two new toll bridges will be opened to traffic at an early date, the Oscar W. Underwood Bridge over the Warrior near Eutaw about June 5, and the George S. Houston Bridge, over the Tennessee at Guntersville about June 10. Construction of fifteen toll bridges by the Alabama Bridge Corporation was authorized by act of the 1927 legislature. The completion of the above two bridges will increase the number completed and opened to traffic to eight. The John T. Morgan Bridge over the Coosa at Childersburg, which has already been opened to traffic, will be formally dedicated with appropriate exercises June 12.

Cooperation of citizens is urged by the State Health Department in securing screening of homes as a protection against the mosquito which carries malaria. The Health Department is launching an intensive drive against malaria, and five counties, Montgomery, Macon, Clarke, Houston and Colbert have been selected as battle grounds for the opening of the campaign. Five additional health experts have been employed for the drive, and citizens of the State, especially the property owners, are requested to give assistance in the work.

Escambia Man Held In Slaying Of Brother, 21

Drewton, Ala., June 2—Arthur Criswell, 28, was held in the Escambia County Jail Monday on first degree murder charges for the fatal shooting early Sunday of his brother, Hubert, 21.

Preliminary hearing has been set here for next Wednesday before Justice of the Peace J. E. Till. The youth was brought to the jail by his father, Frank Criswell, following the shooting, which took place at the residence at McCullough, 12 miles from Atmore.

Sheriff's deputies said the shooting culminated a difficulty which arose between the brothers Saturday. Hubert, with another brother, Howard, returned home early Sunday morning from a dance and as they neared the porch the older brother was said to have opened fire with a pistol, a bullet striking Arthur in the chest, causing instant death. They had not learned Monday night what caused the difficulty. They said the youth charged with the shooting declined to discuss the affair.

Ministers School Opens Formally

More Than 2,000 Persons Attended Exercises At Cook Springs

Cook Springs, Ala., June 2—The American School of Evangelism here has become a reality. The enterprise was dedicated Sunday with fitting ceremonies under direction of Dr. T. T. Martin, field secretary.

The 1,500 acre tract is the gift of Lafayette Cook. Dr. Martin plans to educate young ministers free at the school. An orphanage will be made a part of the school.

Crowds began arriving early, some to attend all the ceremonies, and others to put in a full day inspecting the grounds and hearing speeches in the afternoon. All sections of the surrounding country were represented as evidenced by the automobiles that lined roads leading into Cook Springs from all directions.

Most of the crowds that came early brought dinner to eat on the picnic grounds around the hotel. Some took lunch at the hotel, some in Leeds and Pell City, while a few others drove to the new John H. Bankhead Bridge on the Coosa River for the noonday meal.

After noon the crowds began to increase and by 3 p. m. it was estimated that more than 2,000 were there. Most of these gathered about the east side of the hotel porch where chairs were placed, while many others stood on the ground around the porch.

The entire property came under inspection of the visitors. Many walked the shady path to the old springs. Numerous others looked over the cabins on the grounds, groups gathered about the outlying houses, pavilions and sheds.

Newspapers Necessary To Cultural Progress Of Man, Says Editor

The newspaper is necessary to man's cultural and intellectual progress, according to an address by E. M. Henderson, Sr., assistant managing editor of The Birmingham News, on "Church and Newspaper," before the Pastor's Union of Birmingham and Bessemer Monday at a regular meeting of that body at the First Methodist Church.

Mr. Henderson spoke following a short talk by G. Camargo, of Mexico City, a secretary of the International Sunday School Council, who was in the city en route to Toronto, Canada, to a convention of the International Sunday School Council.

At the opening of the meeting the Rev. Glenn V. Tingley asked the union to encourage enforcement of laws against vagrancy. The request was referred to the social service committee.

In speaking of the place of newspaper publicity in church activities Mr. Henderson said: "We are all agreed that we live in an age when time is of very high value. Consequently, if the church gets its messages to the people generally on time it must be quick about it. In this connection I submit that the newspaper is the quickest and most effective means of church leaders reaching all the people."

"Some 90,000,000 persons in this country read the newspapers, while only a comparatively small percentage attend church and visit the public libraries. Whether the church people relish the idea or not, they must have publicity for their churches. Young persons of your churches are ready and anxious, without salary, to qualify as publicity directors for their individual churches."

LOCAL SINGERS GET 1ST PRIZE IN CONTEST

Clanton Quartette In Meet With Some Of Best Quartettes

The Clanton Quartette was invited down to Tallassee, Alabama, to attend a singing contest there last Thursday night, and not knowing just whether they could accept the invitation, they did not state they would be there. However, arrangements were made and they went down to compete in a contest in which some of the best quartettes of singers in the state were also participating.

The large audience of the Tallassee Theatre was filled to capacity, despite some disagreeable weather Thursday night. One or two of the other quartettes sang, and eventually the time came around for the Clanton singers to try their hand. Three songs were allowed each group.

At the final showdown, the judges pleasingly announced to the vast audience that it was their pleasure to award first prize to the visiting Clanton Quartette, which is composed of W. G. Culp, manager and accompanist, Herbert W. Lowery, second tenor; Jesse Jones, first tenor; Renfro Jones, basso; and Archie Devaughn, baritone. This decision was met with something of a surprise from the Clanton singers, as among the outstanding quartettes of the state who were also competing in the same contest, were the (cont. to back page—first section)

Big Time Is Being Arranged For Fourth

The ladies of the Clanton Methodist church are making ready for the annual celebration on the Fourth of July here, according to announcements given in the News. Some of the main features in their plans are a big barbecue, picnic, and public speaking, saying nothing of the baseball games and the other entertainments for the day.

It was stated that all the details of the celebration have not been completed by the committees in charge of the arrangements. An invitation is extended to every candidate in the state and county to be present at this celebration, regardless of their stand in politics.

The celebration will be held on the grounds of the local high school, and as the arrangements are completed, they will be made known through the county papers.

Mrs. H. G. Martin and daughter, Louise, and Mr. Esslinger of Birmingham spent the week end as guests of Mr. and Mrs. L. C. Warr.

Only one case was disposed of in Mayor Hart's court here Monday morning. The case of L. B. Stone, negro, came up for trial and he was given a fine totalling $87.35, for having in his possession a quantity of liquor, information stated.

City Officers Lowery, Smith and Stanton were contemplating some raids on the western part of the town when they casually walked up to Stone, and asked him to divide his liquor, in a joking way. The negro's conscience got the best of him and he voluntarily gave all he had to him, and later found himself in jail.

JUDGE CARNLEY AT OZARK ON CANDIDACY

Candidate For Governor Tells Something Of Platform In Address

Judge J. A. Carnley, candidate for Governor, in the Democratic primary next August, spoke in behalf of his candidacy at Ozark, Alabama, recently. In his speech Judge Carnley stated that:

"The automobile owners are carrying the burden of road building and road maintenance in Alabama. Until 1927 property carried the burden of public education, when the Graves administration put the harness on some of the 'Big Mules' and now they are pulling some of the load. They are now trying to 'kick out of the harness' and put all the burden back on the farmers and property tax payers. I (Continued On Editorial Page)

CITY PLANS DRILLING OF DEEP WELL HERE

Workmen and machinery were expected to arrive in Clanton this week to start work on the drilling of a well on the city property, where the waterworks system is located. The work is to be done by the Gray Artesian Well Co., of Pensacola, Fla., and it was stated that the company guarantees a sufficient supply of water from their well.

A casing of eight inches or larger, will be sunk into the ground to a depth sufficient to bring the desired results. It is believed that the well will probably give forth a supply of something like 200 gallons per minute.

Miss Bonnie Clyde Griffin of Isabella left Monday for Tuscaloosa where she will enter the summer session of the University of Alabama.

County Agent Stapp reports much interest in the Chilton County Jersey Bull Association that he is trying to help put into operation.

Mr. Stapp met with a group of farmers at Pleasant Grove school west of Jemison, Saturday night, May 31st, in interest of placing a good Jersey bull in the community. Mr. J. P. Montgomery, vocational teacher at Jemison, had already done some preliminary work in the interest of the bull.

After some considerable discussion, Mr. W. H. Rasco, agreed to buy the bull, and the following men promised to patronize the animal:

OPPORTUNITY SCHOOLS WILL BE ORGANIZED

Donations Being Asked For; State Will Also Give Appropriation

A call is being sent out over the county for donations for a fund to conduct the Opportunity Schools in Chilton County again this year. The fund, which has already been started, has made a pleasing headway, and it was stated, that any amount sent in will be fully appreciated and used to satisfactory advantage. Donations are to be sent to Mr. W. M. Wyatt, at The Union-Banner, Clanton.

There will be no doubt of the schools being taught in the county again this year, it was stated, but the fund to be raised has not yet reached the required amount. However, should the fund reach this amount, a larger amount would simply mean that the schools could be conducted in a much better and a more successful manner.

It is needless to state and give a long story of the good these schools have brought about since the time they were first organized, while was only a short time ago. Letters from aged pupils, in which was stated their thankfulness for such an opportunity to better themselves.

Mr. H. A. Harris, who last year was located at Stanton, but who is now living in Clanton, will act as organizer of the schools again this year. There will be fifteen white schools and ten colored, which will be placed in communities that show the most effort and largest interest in the movement, it was stated. All communications along this line should be sent to Mr. Harris at Clanton.

The State will provide $1392.50 and the Rosenwald Fund will amount to $696.25. These donations will be sent in when the amount required of the county is raised. The schools will open in July.

BIG INCREASE IS SHOWN IN ENROLLMENT

Increase Also Shown In The Average Length Of School Term

According to figures secured at the office of the County Superintendent of Education, a marked increase is shown in the number of pupils enrolled in the schools of Chilton County over a period of five years. There was also shown an increase in the average number of school days in each yearly term during this period of time.

The 1925 report of the Board of Education shows a total enrollment of pupils in the elementary schools at 4168, and high schools 725, a total of 4893 pupils enrolled. The report at the end of the term in 1930 showed a total of 4964 enrolled in elementary schools, and 1213 in the high schools, a total of 6177. This is an increase over a period of five years of 1284. These figures given here are for white schools only.

The outstanding increase, as shown, was in the enrollment of the high schools of the county. This figure was almost doubled. The increase, of course called for more expense in the way of equipment and teachers.

Another figure on record is the average increase in the number of school days. In 1925 the average school term of the schools over the county was 120 days. The records now show an average of 134 days on the average school term.

Girl Slain to Appease Ghost

Las Palmas, Canary Islands.—A weird tragedy of peasant superstition that led to a human sacrifice has just been uncovered near the little village of Telde on the island of Tenerife. Back in the hills from Telde in a wretched hut lived a family named Valido, consisting of six—the mother, the father, three daughters, and a ghost—the spirit of a twenty-two-year-old youth, Fernando, who had died a year before.

All members belonged to a cult, described as a mixture of primitive Christianity, spiritualism, and age-old superstition that had lingered in the mountains of Spain from prehistoric days and been brought over to the islands by the early settlers.

This background explains, in part, why the dead Fernando was not only a real member of the family but also its most important member. Every day, by means of magic ritual, living members of the family claimed they would enter into conversation with Fernando's ghost and he would describe to them the wonder and horrors of the world in which he lived and where one day they would go.

One night, the story goes, the ghost appeared and said that there was only one way in which he could be released from the place of shadows and fear in which he was wandering.

One of his sisters would have to be sacrificed to appease the spirits who ruled over the other world. The next morning the three sisters—Calendaria, Amelia and Carmen—drew lots to see which one would die to release the spirit of their brother from torment. It fell to the youngest, Calendaria, sixteen.

Calendaria accepted her fate without a murmur. Her parents and two sisters stripped her naked and tied her on a bed. With a knout, made of heavy knotted ropes, they began to beat her.

Each member of the family in turn took the lash and beat the girl while the others knelt in a corner and chanted mystic incantations. From time to time they would stop and ask the girl if she was ready to join her brother. Each time Calendaria would answer, "Not yet; keep on." After six hours of beating she died.

A few days later, when one of the surviving sisters went to the village she told the story, relating that now her brother's spirit was at peace. The tale came to the ears of the police, who arrested the entire family. All of them confessed the crime and explained in detail the ceremony of the human sacrifice.

The Singing Master

Hungarian Laughs at Insomnia

Trenton, N. J.—Here is the story of a man, who for seventy-eight years, has stared with sleepless eyes at a changing world.

The astounding case of Albert E. Herpin, which baffled physicians thirty years ago, comes to light again now with the claim of a Hungarian war veteran that he has not slept in fifteen years.

For Herpin, hale and hearty, says he has not closed his eyes in sleep during his 78 years of life, and there is none to disprove it.

He has sat through the long night hours, erect in his chair, devouring the day's news to help while away the time others reposed in slumber.

Physicians who attempted to solve his case, shrugged their shoulders resignedly after keeping him under observation for years. It was too much for them.

He rests, he says, while his eyes are never closed, he relaxes in his sitting position and gains at least physical respite from his labors of the day.

But his mind is never at rest. He has never known the oblivion of sleep. Through the long round of hours each day, his conscious mind is alert.

An omnivorous reader of news (Herpin detests fiction), he is almost an encyclopedia of important events during the last sixty years. Seven newspapers each night cover his rest period.

Column by column he pores over the events of the day down to the smallest paragraphs, digesting the news as he goes.

Herpin is as much at a loss to account for his strange condition as physicians.

He does not deplore his lot. His few attempts to sleep have succeeded only in irritating him. To close his eyes brings not relaxation, but nervousness.

Aside from his sleeplessness, Herpin leads a very normal existence. He earns his livelihood as caretaker in homes of the exclusive Perdicas Place section of Trenton.

"I'm not a crank," he says laughingly, "I like to enjoy myself in my own way. I smoke at night, lots of it. I'm a teetotaler, but I'm against prohibition."

Royal Secrets Closely Guarded

London.—Of all the great collections of historical documents to be found in the scores of museums and libraries of England, the most secret-kept and the most jealously guarded are the king's archives in Windsor castle.

All that the outside world actually knows about this valuable collection is that it is kept in a strong room in the great round tower of the ancient castle and that only the members of the royal family and the recorder of the king's archives are permitted to examine the papers.

The archives are the private property of the sovereign and the state can claim no ownership or supervision. They consist of documents dealing with the royal family during the last several centuries.

The archives are singularly rich in papers dealing with the Stuart family and largely concern the pretender to the Stuart throne after the fall of the last Stuart monarch.

Other documents deal with King George III and his movements, with George IV and with various ministers of state. Most of the latter are of a highly secret nature and are in script. There also is a large collection of Victorian papers from the time of Lord Melbourne, who was Queen Victoria's first prime minister. There are documents in the collection from all parts of the world, from sov-eigns, presidents, ministers of state and ambassadors. The archives may not become public property until the royal family is extinct.

DIPPING INTO SCIENCE

Sun's Gravity Greater Than Earth's

The gravity of the sun is far greater than that of the earth. Scientists claim that a person weighing 150 pounds on the earth would weigh nearly two tons on the sun. A weight is attracted to the earth at the rate of 16.08 feet for the first second, whereas on the sun the rate would be 444 feet for the first second.

THINGS TO DO

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

I knew Stephens for more than forty years, and the longer I knew him the more I marveled at the varied interests he had developed and the amount he was accomplishing. At eighty he was launching into a half dozen new investigations which would require a dozen years to bring to a successful conclusion. He went at his work like a boy of twenty—with force, enthusiasm, determination, and the keenest interest.

He read omnivorously. Every leisure moment of his seemed to be taken up with some new volume or other in which he had found interest. "Have you read this history of Chicago?" he asked me when I was calling on him.

"It's tremendously interesting. Take it home and look it over."

History, science, philosophy, biography, fiction—it made no difference what the subject was—he found something to engage his attention, something to stimulate his mind, something to widen his sympathies and his interests.

He was a fluent writer, also. Very few months passed without something coming from his pen—a new scientific theory advanced, the result of an investigation, or the discussion of a topic which was of general interest to the community or to the state. Most men would have been satisfied to pursue one line of scientific investigation and carry it to its conclusion. He had a dozen and was considered authority in any one of them. He was interested in birds and knew more about them than any one I have ever known; he liked gardening and, long after most men have given up active life, he was planning a formal garden in his back yard and selecting trees and shrubs which it would take twenty years to bring to perfection.

He knew a half dozen languages and could read fluently in any one of them, and speak, too. He never lacked for something to do. He never grew old. I saw him in his last illness—eighty-six he was—but he still had the enthusiasm of a boy.

"I don't see what they are keeping me here for," he complained to me. "I think I am all right, and besides I have so many things that I ought to be doing, and if I don't get at them soon, I may fail to finish them."

He never finished the tasks, but until almost the last moment of his long and useful life the day held for him a score of tasks which he was eager to get at, pleasures yet untasted, enjoyments which had not lost their attraction. If he had lived to be a hundred there would have been for him always something worth while to do.

Martin retired at fifty—bored with his work, tired of the monotony of life, not able to find anything interesting in his work, or worth giving his attention to. He didn't care for reading, he had no interest in sports or music or the drama, nor did he find enjoyment in association with his neighbors. There just wasn't anything to do, and he died before sixty from sheer lack of interest in anything. Nothing to do.

POULTRY

NOT NECESSARY TO VARY CHICKS' DIET

Feed Same Mash From 36-Hour Age Until Maturity.

The Cornell mash mixture for baby chicks eliminates the old practice of changing the feed every few days. The same mash is fed from the first feeding at 36 to 48 hours to maturity, and at eight weeks a grain mixture is added, says Prof. L. M. Hurd at Cornell university.

The chicks are allowed constant access to the mash, but it is best to feed so that fresh mash can be added twice a day. There should be enough hoppers space so that all the chicks may eat at the same time. Fine grit may be given from the start and after shell when the chicks are about four months old. Charcoal is unnecessary, he says.

Cod liver oil should be fed at the rate of one-half pint to every 100 pounds of mash during the period when grain is fed, especially if the chicks are indoors most of the time. When grain and mash are fed, one pint is used with each 100 pounds of mash. If the chicks run outdoors daily, no oil is needed after eight weeks.

The Cornell mash contains 45 pounds of yellow corn meal, 10 of wheat bran, 15 of ground wheat middlings, 10 of fine flour, heavy oats, 10 of 50 to 55 per cent protein meat scrap, 10 of dried skim milk or dried buttermilk, 2 of steamed bone meal, and one-half pound of salt. The grain mixture is 60 pounds of cracked yellow corn and 40 pounds of wheat.

The grain mixture should be in hoppers, always accessible to the chicks. They should not eat more grain by weight than mash until they are three months old. It is sometimes necessary to restrict the grain to get proper mash consumption, says Professor Hurd.

Two of Most Effective Destroyers of Vermin

Two of the most effective house destroyers are blue ointment applied to the skin beneath the vent in about the amount of a bit the size of a grain of corn, and the powder sodium fluoride, applied in pinches well worked down to the skin of a half dozen parts of the hen's body.

A more recent application is to the perches instead of to the birds. This consists of the poisonous liquid Blackhead 40, a very concentrated tobacco preparation. A ribbon of this is spread from an oil can or other convenient container along the top of each perch shortly before the fowls go to roost. The fumes arising kill the lice, according to various authorities who have tried the method.

Open Shed Shelter Is Favored for Turkeys

A form of shelter for turkeys which has proven very satisfactory when it is necessary to construct shelter, is the open shed of the machinery shed type. One end can be closed at the front and the roosts placed in that end, so that they will always be protected from wind and storm. This type of structure affords excellent ventilation, ample room for exercise, and all the protection that is necessary. Another advantage of this type is the fact that the shed can be used for sheltering small machinery in the summer.

Rat Poison Discovered Is Harmless to Humans

Don't throw up the sponge when a rat runs off with a chicken, and beware "bad luck." Science says, "Let's get the rat," and starts out to do it. As a matter of fact, and this may be news, too, there grows on the coast of Italy, in the Mediterranean sea, a big bulb, called squill. Scientists with the United States Department of Agriculture found that the essence of that bulb would kill rats. It will not kill and is not poisonous to hen, dog or man.

Lice Deterrent

Thick cream on the head of a poult as a deterrent of head lice is better than grease, for grease will also kill. Camphorated oil applied very lightly between the quill feathers with a fine paint brush will do the work, but it must be used economically. Poult must not be confined at night in a newly painted coop, painted either with paint or lice killer.

Another essential "must not" if one would have thrifty poult—if they must not run on chicken range.

Broiler Feeding Tests

Broiler raising tests were conducted with Single Comb Rhode Island Reds at the North Carolina State college. It required seven pounds of feed to raise and fatten a two-pound broiler for market. This includes both mash and grain. The feed cost amounted to 20 cents. The chick at 20 cents and other costs at 10 cents will make the two-pound broiler stand you 50 cents when ready to sell. Fall is a good time to raise a few hundred broilers.

Improved Clover Growing Methods

Now Possible to Grow Crop on Sour Soil With Use of Little Lime.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture)

Sweet clover has so recently been added to the list of important American forage crops that new methods of growing and using the plant are constantly being found.

L. W. Kephart, agronomist of the United States Department of Agriculture, points out that new methods have made it possible to grow sweet clover on slightly sour soil with very little lime; to get better stands by double inoculation; to obtain satisfactory results with unlimed seed sown in the winter and with sweet clover mixed with grasses in pasture; and to feed green sweet clover to live stock so as to cause the minimum of bloating.

Sour Soil.

Sweet clover may be grown successfully on soil only slightly sour with a relatively small quantity of lime by mixing it with the seed. Usually about 400 or 500 pounds of hydrated lime with the seed is enough for one acre. The mixture is sown through a fertilizer attachment of a wheat drill. Applied in this way the lime falls close to the seed, Mr. Kephart says, and it is immediately available to the seedlings. Apparently the seedling stage is the critical time with respect to lime requirement, and if the seedlings become established the plants thrive.

Slow Germination.

To overcome slowness of germination of sweet clover seed, seed may be scarified for late spring or summer planting, but growers have found that the seed in the fall is better for late fall or winter and will ordinarily germinate by warm weather, Mr. Kephart says. In most of the central and eastern states unlimed seed scattered on a frozen wheat field in January or February has proved to be one of the most reliable methods of obtaining a stand.

The binder is being used to bundle sweet clover when cut for hay, thus improving the curing, at reasonable cost, and clover is used in pasture mixtures with grasses in some sections, increasing the pasturing season and improving the grazing. Farmers have learned to reduce the danger of live stock bloating while feeding on green sweet clover by feeding some hay before turning stock on sweet-clover pasture, so the animals will not gorge themselves on this plant.

Hogs Become Infested With Small Round Worms

Pigs often become infested with round worms (ascaris) in embryo form when they nurse the soiled teats of the sow for the first time. The worms are carried by the blood stream to the lungs where they cause a form of so-called "thumps" which may prove fatal. Prevent by washing the sow clean before she farrows and repeat the washing of the udder and teats before the pigs are allowed to nurse for the first time. As soon as the pigs are nursing well move the sow and litter in a clean wagon to a sanitary colony house on new grass and then keep them absolutely away from all places used by other swine. Prevention is all-important. There is no successful treatment. It may be added that dust from bedding may also cause fatal pneumonia. Provide bedding that is practically free from dust.

Inoculating for Peas

Established Practice

Inoculation of the field legumes, soy beans, alfalfa and sweet clover, has become an established practice on the bulk of corn belt farms unless previous successful growing of the crop makes it unnecessary. Inoculation for garden peas and sweet peas has not been commonly practiced. Both garden peas and sweet peas have been used in test work at Wisconsin university to test the efficiency of various strains of nitrogen gathering bacteria. The difference in size and rate of growth between those not inoculated and those treated with an efficient strain of bacteria would appear to justify such treatment for garden and sweet peas.

Agricultural Hints

Low-priced grains, crops for hogging off, legume pasture, skim milk, garbage and other cheap farm by-products should form the basis for hog raising.

Scientists sow plant seeds where they have the least chance to succeed, as a means of developing hardy strains. But that method is for scientific research and doesn't pay well on the farm.

The formaldehyde treatment will control both the loose and covered smuts of oats and prevent losses which often run as high as 10 to 40 per cent. The cost is 2 1/2 cents an acre for chemicals.

Saving garden vegetables after frost, cuts the grocery bill and reduces the strain on the canned goods. A cool, dry cellar is the best place for the storage of vegetables, but sheds and pits are good substitutes.

The Wrong Lady

By RICHARD ROE

(Copyright.)

THE smooth road stretched out like black ribbon. There was scarcely any traffic—little by little the pointer crept around on the speedometer—Margaret felt as if she were dying. Suddenly two blinding lights came toward her and she turned out a little—a crash that sounded like the end of the world—the instinctive jamming on of brakes—a reeling ride in the field—and then the smart coupe turned over with a crash of glass.

"Are you hurt?" asked a white-faced young man.

"I don't think so," she said shakily. "What hit me?"

"You hit me," he replied grimly, "or at least my roadster, and if I hadn't jumped you would have killed me. As it is I bet you've done five hundred dollars worth of damages on the car."

"Oh, really? Well, look at mine!" she retorted hotly. "You didn't have any lights or I wouldn't have run into you."

"I did have a light and you were going entirely too fast. A car of that make never should be driven as you were driving—it isn't built for it."

That was too much. To smash her car and then defame it—her lovely new pale gray coupe that had been driven but once, Margaret's voice rose.

"You had no lights and I am going to have you arrested. Where's a policeman?"

An obliging boy who loved a rumpus went off to find one and Margaret put in the interval investigating the wounds of the coupe. Finally a wrecker came up and hoisted the battered car out of the mud and departed with it forlornly trailing behind.

The bored justice of the peace holding traffic court bristled up when he saw Margaret, pretty, well-dressed and impressive. "What's the charge?" he asked solicitously.

"Parked without lights," said the policeman wearily.

The justice looked shocked. "What have you to say?" he demanded sternly of the young man.

"I had lights," he replied indignantly, "until she banged into me and put 'em out."

The justice, a young and personable man, looked at Margaret, prettier than ever in a rage. "It is not true," she said. She said more—considerably more—but presently she became aware that the justice seemed to be looking rather than listening. He roused himself from pleasant thought and turned to the young man. "Pined ten dollars for being parked without lights," he said.

The young man paid under bitter protest but the victory was all Margaret's. John Anderson left court with vengeance in his heart. Tomorrow he would start suit against that hateful girl and punish her insurance company if he could not punish her.

From the address she had given to court he knew that he passed her house on his way to business and his wrath blazed up afresh as he went by next morning. After he had passed he recalled that there had been a car outside the house, and with a little far it came to him that it was the familiar car of a doctor.

At night when he went home the same car was there, and somehow his anger seemed to be evaporating. When he got home he telephoned his lawyer to do nothing about the suit until he heard from him.

The next morning the doctor was coming out of the house and John Anderson hurried up to catch him. The doctor was in a hurry and when he saw the young man's inquiring expression he replied to it. "Pretty bad today. A shock is a serious matter with a heart like Miss Willis'." And he plunged into his car, leaving a young man whose own heart suddenly felt as if it had something wrong with it.

"A shock," he reflected, "a bad heart—my gosh, the girl may die, and I feel like a murderer!" He sent flowers on his way home and the next day got his secretary to telephone an inquiry. The report was dubious and he rushed off to order flowers again. There was surely a bad week for John Anderson.

Margaret Willis had a trying week, too, and at the end of it when the doctor said everything was safe and the patient well on the road to recovery, she decided to take a walk.

"Auntie, dear, I won't be gone long, but promise me that you won't fall down stairs again while I'm out." With a gentle kiss she ran downstairs and out into the street which seemed beautiful after her confinement in her aunt's bedroom.

The trees had leafed out, tulips were in bloom, it was a gay, fresh May morning. A young man came toward Margaret with his eyes bulging out of his head. His face was one great green smile as he grasped her reluctant hand.

"Why, you're well again," he said, "and you look as strong as ever—I never was so happy in my life—if you had died I would have smashed the d-d car with an ax—the lights were really very dim because the battery was low."

Comprehension dawned on Margaret and she pulled away her hand. "There weren't any lights at all or I shouldn't have bumped into you," she said.

Well, they were both persons who made up their minds quickly, so six months later they were fighting over where they would go to spend their honeymoon.

Fresh Egg Specialist

Astonished observers rubbed their eyes and pinched each other the other day when they saw O. J. Sincum sedately walking to market with one egg in a basket.

"How come?" they queried each to each. "Wherefore and likewise why?" "You fellows wouldn't understand."

explained O. J., "but the fact is just this. When I sell fresh eggs, they are strictly fresh and don't ever doubt it. I follow the hens around and as soon as an egg is deposited in a nest I carry it to the store. If a customer is particular, he can get eggs for his breakfast that are not over ten minutes old. This is an age of specializing and I am a fresh egg specialist."—Vineyard (Mass.) Gazette.

Rewarded!

THIS eight year old athlete is the son of Rev. and Mrs. C. F. Jenkins, Lyndon, Kansas. Mrs. Jenkins says: "Both my boys are the very picture of health. We have been more than rewarded for our faith in California Fig Syrup."

"During babyhood we used Fig Syrup with them quite regularly. Since they have been older we have used it to regulate their bowels during colds or upsets."

All children love the rich, fruity flavor of California Fig Syrup. A pure vegetable product, it does not gripe or sicken. It always acts gently but thoroughly to cleanse the digestive system of bilious, headachy, constipated babies or children. Bad breath, coated tongue, feverishness, disappear with its use. Doctors say it strengthens weak bowels!

Look for the name California when buying. That marks the genuine.

THE CHILTON COUNTY NEWS

J. B. ATKINSON, PUBLISHER

Published every Thursday at Clanton, Alabama in the interest of Clanton and the entire Chilton County

BILLY SMITH Editor

Entered in the postoffice of Clanton, Alabama, as second class matter under the Act of Congress of March, 1897.

Try First At Home

Nothing sentimental nor begging about a request for the people of this county to trade with home town merchants. It is just a straight out business request and will bring about pleasing results if given consideration.

If, after you have tried at home and found that you can do better elsewhere, which we very much doubt, for our merchants are ever on their toes to give the people of this community the most value for their dollars, then is plenty of time to go seeking other places to spend your money.

Home-spent dollars remain here and work for us—a fact that has been proven time and again. Anything that we can do individually to make this community more prosperous will help to increase our own prosperity. When we spend money at home, we are, in a way of speaking, eating our cake and keeping it, too. Without this town as a trading center, it is doubtful if we would have the churches, the schools, that are an active part of our everyday community life. To retain them and increase their scope of influence, it is necessary that we maintain the town that makes them possible.

"Antagonism of Atoms"

Many of us are taught, from childhood on, that competition is necessary to the health and progress of the race. Or, as Herbert Spencer puts it, "Society flourishes by the antagonism of its atoms." But really the golden truth is that co-operation is good and competition is bad, and that society flourishes by the mutual aid of human beings. It is quite well known that all military or commercial enterprises individualism must be subordinated into collective workings. People do not believe that a house divided against itself will stand. They believe that it will surely fall.

People know that a State divided by internal feuds and torn by faction fighting can not hold its own against a united people. It is also generally known that in a football game, a baseball game, a ship's crew, the "antagonism of the atoms," would simply mean defeat and failure. It is also known that if men are to found and govern cities, to build bridges, and make roads, to establish universities, to sail ships, and create religions, they must work together, and not be pulling against one another. Surely these things are as plain as the fact that there would be no hive unless the bees worked as a colony.

Optimism Justified For Progressive Farmers

Now is the time for all farmers to make plans and mature policies for this fall and next spring. Make it a practice to pay entirely out every year, do not count on getting it renewed. Put forth a desperate effort and you will be greatly surprised how much can be accomplished.

Plan to build up a good reserve that will carry you next year, or at least as far as possible into 1931. First of all make a living at home and then all the cotton you can. Now we mean by "a living at home" that you raise all feed necessary to make another crop for 1931, and then you will be farming on your own resources. We have too many farmers that depend too heavily upon borrowing money to purchase feed products. A wise farmer who operates his farm upon its own resources is the one that is safe, happy and prosperous.

Now is the time to make plans for the future, do not wait to think things through until the busy season, you will fail to make wise and conservative plans for the operation of your farm. It takes THINKING and PLANNING to land safely upon your obligations at maturity. WISE and HONEST MANAGEMENT is the sure road to success.

Busses and the Railroads

The Greenville Advocate recently threw a new light on the ever-increasing problem of the fight between the busses and the railroads by citing some facts and figures to show just how much the railroads have done and are doing toward the prosperity of Butler County, while the busses contribute nothing.

Since reading the Advocate's article on the subject we have checked up in this county and find that for 1929 the L. & N. Railroad paid a total of $49,900 in state and county taxes alone. This amount is exclusive of taxes paid to the several towns of the county and also does not take into account the amount of privilege licenses that it paid to do business in the county and its incorporated towns.

In addition to taxes paid by it, the L. & N. furnishes employment to more than 200 persons in this county. It supplies the services of expert agriculturists, horticulturists and live stock men, to assist those who desire their services in making better and more profitable crops and in producing more dairy products. In many other ways it contributes to the upbuilding of the territory.

On the other hand, the buss companies pay practically no taxes. They employ only a handful of people and even the gas for most of them is bought at some of the larger terminal points. They enjoy the protection of the laws which the railroads pay taxes to help enforce. They are content to let someone else develop the territory and make absolutely no contribution to its upbuilding.

When you can choose between traveling by train or by bus or between shipping by freight or by truck, bear the above comparisons in mind. Don't criticize the chain stores for taking everything from and giving nothing to the community so long as you are patronizing the bus lines that do exactly the same thing.

"Clantonians, Let's Talk Clanton."

"ROUND TOWN"

---by Doug

Opinions expressed in this column by this writer have no connection with the general policies of this paper, being wholly those of the writer, in the manner they are written.

"It's good to have money and the things that money can buy, but it's good, too, to check up once in a while and make sure you haven't lost the things that money can't buy."

—George Horace Lorimer.

"Clantonians, Let's Talk Clanton."

There was a large crowd of people in Clanton Saturday, and I wondered if they were doing any buying. Kind of scouted around a little and found that Mr. Lande and Mr. Fox were the main attractions in town. That is, I mean their sales appeared to be the main attractions. Both these Clanton merchants did some extensive advertising before opening their sales, running ads in the paper announcing them. So, naturally, they were the ones who got the bulk of the trade here Saturday. They had something to offer to the people and they told them about it by advertising. And by looking further, I found that the non-advertisers were not so busy. There is a moral to this, figure it out.

I understand that citizens of Thorsby now have a very kindly feeling toward our fire department, judging from some expressions heard up there following the fire Saturday morning. They are unlike some of our Clanton citizens, who have a tendency to criticize the volunteer firemen. And these critics stand a good chance of getting a good wetting if they are seen in range of a fire hose at a fire.

Another telephone call to the editor about this column last week. He is sure getting raw with me about folks accusing him of my work. A young lady wanted to know something about something I said last week, and I'm afraid I can't answer that question, and feel right about it. Sorry.

That's one trouble with Clanton. We don't toot our own horn enough. And believe me, I think Clanton has lots of things to be proud of. There are our two banks. Both as sound as the Rock of Gibraltar, and lots better looking, including their employees. No sarcasm in that remark, either. I'm on the level there, and no kiddin'. And think of our newspapers. That's something to be proud of. Take for instance the News, which is more or less considered and called C. G. N. It published the largest issue in its history last week, I believe, and judging from the many pleasing comments coming in, it went over in a big way. By the way, that serial story is good, and the subscribers of the C. G. N. can truthfully say they are getting their money's worth now.

I've been trying to figure out which is best when speaking of Clanton people, Clantonian or Clantonian. Clantonian seems rather long and not as easy to say as Clantonian, and still, it sounds a little better I believe. Would be glad to have some opinions on this, as I have a slogan I am going to inaugurate. It's this: "Clantonians, Let's Talk Clanton." Not a bad one for the Kiwanis Club, if you pardon my saying so.

"Clantonians, Let's Talk Clanton."

Did you ever notice what a bright front the Calloway Drug Store has recently put on? It sure makes that place look lively and inviting. And V. J. Elmore has had a new coat of paint put on his store. This is not a bad example for other merchants in Clanton to follow. Paint up and clean up a little, it won't hurt you nor your business. On the contrary, it may help things some. You know, folks are looking for the bright things in life now, so make your place of business one of them.

Clanton has a quartette of singers to be proud of. Herbert Lowery, Will Culp, Jesse Jones, Archie Devaughn and Renfro Jones, who compose the Clanton Quartette, went down to Tallahassee last Thursday night and walked away with the first prize in a contest there. They were up against some strong competition too. Well, I suppose they will soon find themselves among the popular radio artists. I understand they are to sing over "The Voice of Alabama" in the near future.

Flunked

This is a message to the student. Just because you have flunked in your examinations does not necessarily mean that you are lazy or incompetent. On the contrary, it may merely be a sign of your ability. Schools are arranged somewhat on the idea that there are a certain amount of cubic feet of knowledge that a student is supposed to store in his brain so that he may be able to pass from one grade to another. They are also arranged on the theory that you can not really know about a given subject unless you can write about it—to pass a written or oral examination.

Both of these ideas are not sound. They rest on a theory of education that is out of date—the theory that education consists of a student measuring up to a pre-arranged system. True education is really the development of the individual child's talents, whatever they may be. A child may be, by nature, not able to master mathematics, and still he may have a natural turn to Latin or Greek, or he may have been born with a taste for music, or agriculture, or for machinery. A system of education that does not take in consideration individual trends is not education at all, for education is the bringing out of what is really in a person, and not attempting to stuff into him something that he can not and never will understand. The idea of grading a child by the amount of text book stuff they can master is passe. No school examination is a test of what a person understands or can do.

Writing or speaking is something of a gift. The student who can best tell about a thing more glibly is not necessarily the one who most comprehends it. A man may be able to manage a bank, run a newspaper, or command a regiment, make horseshoes, or speak a foreign language, and then be at a loss when it came to write about how he does it. The trouble with the school system is there are too many children to the teacher. Real teaching thus being impossible, then the system of grading and examinations is resorted to.

Stingy taxpayers, ignorant school boards and narrow voters are all combined to lay the blame on the child, branding him as "dull." They may call you stupid, but never mind. So also they called Charles Dickens, Steffanson, David Livingston and Thomas Edison.

favor a retention of the 1927 'Educational Trust Funds' for longer school terms and free text books. Property owners should not be caused to carry all the burden of public schools and public roads.

"Every time more money is needed for highways they have amended the Constitution so that the automobile industry would have to carry the burden. Selfish interests in Alabama—'big wealth'—has dodged paying taxes for roads. Fifty millions of dollars have been issued for roads, and the automobile owner has been asked to carry this burden. We pay tag taxes for $25,000,000 and we pay gasoline taxes for $25,000,000. Besides this the automobile industry must carry all sorts of license taxes, and this, too, must all be absorbed by the owners of motor vehicles. According to published reports, the proportion of taxes on auto owners is entirely too much.

"The automobile owner and dealer are patriotic and willing to bear all reasonable taxes for good roads, but they should not be taxed out of reason. I favor retaining the two cents gasoline taxes for County Road building and maintenance. I do not favor any further increase of tag or gasoline taxes. I do not favor any further increase of license taxes on the automobile business in Alabama. We must have revenues for a progressive road program, but why should we tax any industry out of existence? Patriotic taxpayers have been 'long-suffering and tender-forbearing' for good roads and good schools. Let Big Corporate Wealth contribute its proper share.

"The Big Mule crowd is not supporting Carnley for Governor. The suffering taxpayer is supporting me. We must revise our revenue laws to the end that farmers and automobile owners and home owners shall not be caused to carry all the burden. They now bear 75% of the tax burden. They do not have 75% of the income. Big wealth has about 25% of the income and bears about 25% of the taxes. This is not fair. 'Taxation without representation is unjust.' The program of the selfish interests has been to make those less able bear the burden of revenues for schools and public highways in Alabama.

"Take ad valorem taxes off motor cars and trucks that purchase tags and pay gasoline taxes. Don't require a full year tag tax for only part of the year. Let us be fair. Taxation must not be confiscation of property in Alabama. I stand for a square deal to all interests and for a progressive road program."

Crestview Poultry Farm Is Well Equipped With Modern Brooders

On a recent visit to the Crestview Poultry Farm, which is located just north of Clanton on the old highway, a representative of the News was shown through the large houses in which the brooders are kept, and was also shown how the chickens are—you might say, manufactured—with the use of the brooders. This courtesy was extended by Mr. Frank E. Mastin, proprietor and operator of the Crestview Poultry Farm.

Pictured above is a type of brooder that is being used by the Crestview Poultry Farm. This brooder is one of the most modern types of its kind being made. The above picture shows a heating system using coal or wood for fuel. Mr. Mastin has gone a step further and has his brooder equipped with an oil burner.

The little coops on the brooder are where the chickens are kept. It will be noticed that the top layer of coops are smaller than the lower ones, and that the two others are different in size. After the chickens are hatched and grown to a certain size and age, they are placed in the upper story of the brooder. There they stay until they have grown some more, and then are placed in the next story of the brooder. This is repeated with the growing of the chicken, until he reaches the lower story, and then after staying there for awhile, he is ready for the market. Many of the chickens, in fact, practically all the chickens raised for eating purposes in this manner, never touch the ground, which is responsible for the delicious flavor they have when cooked.

Mr. Mastin stated that he would be glad to show anyone through his poultry farm at any time he is there.

Time For Planting Fall Crop Tomatoes

Auburn, Ala., June 12.—A method whereby Alabama farmers and others may have tomatoes from their own gardens until Christmas or in some cases even until February is explained by Julian Brown, extension horticulturist at the Alabama Polytechnic Institute.

"Early settings of tomato plants are well on their way to production," he said, "but later settings should be made in order to provide a continuous supply. There are few home gardens which have this continuous supply from the time the first ripen until frost in the fall. It is possible to have this delicious vegetable fresh from the garden every day until frost and then by picking the green fruits and storing them in a room of moderate temperature have them until the end of the year or, in some cases, until February of the following year."

The last planting of tomato seed should be made in North Alabama June 10, in Central Alabama, June 15, and in South Alabama, June 20, Mr. Brown said, and emphasized that plantings for the fall crop should not be made later than these dates. "Some prefer to plant these seed in the row where they are to remain, while others prefer to plant in a bed and transplant to the field," he continued. "Under average conditions, best results seem to have been obtained by planting in a bed."

Dry weather makes transplanting difficult and the Auburn horticulturist says that deep setting is a way to overcome this condition. "In setting large plants under such conditions, a deep hole should be dug and the plant set so as to leave only two or three limbs above ground," he said. "This enables the plant to absorb moisture from a greater depth."

Although he was hurled 20 feet in the air when struck by a fast train at Baltimore, John Walker, 4, suffered only slight cuts about the head.

A set of teeth carved from a hickory plank by his own hands are giving W. H. Workman of Loami, Ill., good service.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Congress Overrides Hoover Veto of Spanish War Pension Measure.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

PRESIDENT HOOVER is not having a pleasant time with a congress whose mind is to a considerable extent fixed on the chances of re-election next fall. The majority in both houses is Republican but it isn't always "administration," especially when being so might cost some votes at the polls.

This condition was illustrated last week when congress overrode the President's veto of the Spanish war veterans' pension bill. In repassing the measure the senate voted 61 to 18 against Hoover, and those for the bill included 28 Republicans, 32 Democrats and one Farmer-Labor member. Only 14 members of the lower house, all Republicans, voted to uphold the veto, with 298 against it.

Vetoing any pension bill is painful for a President, and in this case Mr. Hoover displayed courage. His three objections to the measure were held by the press of the country for the most part to be well taken. The provisions he opposed are the reduction of the service period upon which pension claims may be made for disabilities of a non-service nature from 90 to 70 days; and that venereal diseases, drug habits or alcoholism, contracted at any time in the life of the veteran, shall constitute disabilities entitling the sufferer to a pension. He also contended that need should be an element of valid claim.

WHAT will happen to the London naval treaty in the senate is still a matter of conjecture. Senators Watson and Moses last week urged the President to postpone the consideration of the pact until after the autumn elections, but he insisted on his plan to call a special session of the senate immediately after the adjournment of congress. This despite the warning from the two leaders that if the discussion proved to be protracted the senate might adjourn the special session and throw the whole question over to the winter session. Next day Senator Henry J. Allen of Kansas submitted to Mr. Hoover a plan that seemed to impress him.

The Kansas senator thought that the wisest strategy would be to bring the treaty before the senate at the present session, immediately following the passage of the rivers and harbors bill, but before the veterans' legislation is taken up. There has been much talk of the difficulty of keeping a quorum of the senate on hand to discuss the treaty, but Mr. Allen opined that few senators would dare go home before the veterans' bill comes up.

CERTAIN citizens who have been badgered, embarrassed and distressed by the persistent problings of congressional investigating committees probably chafed—in private—for Bishop James Cannon, Jr., last week. That militant chairman of the board of temperance and social service of the Methodist church, South, and official of the Anti-Saloon league, challenged the authority of the senate lobby committee to investigate his political activities in the campaign of 1928, refused to reply to its questions in that connection and defied its implied threats to punish him for contempt, as others have been punished in similar circumstances.

Cannon was willing to tell a lot about his work as a lobbyist, "using the word in its legitimate sense," in behalf of prohibition legislation, but, as he stated to the press afterward, he insisted "that this slinging out of myself and of the Virginia anti-Smith Democrats because we fought the wet Tammany candidate is a deliberate, intolerable infringement upon the rights of American citizens, and is a threat to independent citizens against a repetition of the independent action of 1928."

The bishop also told the press much about the disposal of money contributed by E. C. Jamieson of New York for the anti-Smith campaign in Virginia—information he had refused to give the committee.

Senator Caraway, chairman of the committee, who was in Arkansas at the time, issued a statement upholding the bishop's stand and denying that the committee had a right to inquire into Cannon's political activities. The investigation was being conducted by Senators Walsh of Montana and Blaine of Wisconsin.

On Thursday Bishop Cannon repeated his refusal to answer the committee's questions, and then coolly walked out of the room without waiting to be excused. He was done, he said, unless the committee wished to subpoena him.

"If the bishop's defiance yesterday was not contempt, I think it was, his action today is certainly a clear case of contempt," declared Walsh, whose opinion was echoed by a number of senators. The contumacy of Cannon probably will be reported to the senate with a request for contempt proceedings.

ONE more step in the President's dry enforcement program was taken when the house, by a vote of 218 to 117, passed the Wickersham bill designed to relieve congestion in the federal courts by eliminating jury trials in minor prohibition cases.

If it becomes law the measure will radically revise the federal court procedure in criminal cases extant for more than a hundred years. It provides that defendants charged with "petty offenses" shall first be given a hearing before a United States commissioner whose recommendations shall go to the District judge for final disposal. The accused will be given a jury trial only if he demands it in a specified manner and time limit.

The house also adopted bills supplemental to the juryless trial measure, one of them defining as "petty offenses" all crimes involving a jail sentence of less than six months or a fine of less than $500, and another amending the Jones act to make the manufacture, transportation or sale of less than one gallon of liquor a "petty offense."

The Democratic party of Pennsylvania is now officially wet. The state committee, which was reorganized at Harrisburg, adopted a platform that recommends the repeal of the state enforcement act and the Volstead act and removal of the Eighteenth amendment from the federal Constitution.

IF THERE is a naval building race between France and Italy, the blame must rest with France, according to Foreign Secretary Dino Grandi of Italy. In a speech before the senate Grandi said that last month in Geneva he proposed to Aristide Briand that the two nations suspend their naval construction program for 1930 and that the French foreign minister refused to consider the proposition. The senate thereupon approved the government's policy of augmenting the Italian navy. Several of the senators declared the Mediterranean would be the theater of the next European war. Recently Premier Tardieu announced that the French would expend large sums for fortifications in the Alps. In reply, Senator Ricci of Italy urged the continued strengthening of the Italian frontier defenses in that region. Three questions divide France and Italy today, continued Senator Ricci. They are, first, control of the Adriatic; second, the status of Italians in Tunis, and third, the southern frontier of Libya. He repeated the oft heard charges that France was pouring arms and military supplies into Jugo-Slav ports.

PUTTING a stop to the raids on the salt works, the rainy season came to the aid of the British in India. But the campaign of the Nationalists, though checked, has not ceased to function. The Gandhi followers and all the rest of them are now concentrating on tax resistance, which will be more serious than salt raids.

On the northwest frontier, where the Reds and wild tribesmen are giving a lot of trouble, British troops occupied several villages and took command of the situation, shelling the positions of the rebels in the hills.

TERRIFIC fighting was reported to be going on along the Yellow river between the Chinese Nationalist armies and the northern rebels, with the final results in doubt. Dispatches told of victories claimed by first one side and then the other. The outcome of this conflict may settle the fate of the Nanking government. Late in the week messages received in Shanghai said the northern troops had crossed the Yellow river sixty miles east of Tsinanfu, broken the Nationalist lines and reached the Tsinan-Tsingtao railway line in the vicinity of Chowsan. The Nationalists also lost the important city of Changhai, capital of Hunan province, to a crowd of rebels and bandits called the Red army.

Apparently the Russians have given up hope of results from the Moscow conference between China and Russia on the Chinese Eastern railroad and have reverted to direct action along the frontier of northern Manchuria. The Nationalist government charges the Soviets have raided the town of Tabeiho in Chinese territory opposite Blagoveshchensk and carried away a number of Chinese and also a large amount of farming machinery.

CARRYING twenty-two passengers and a large cargo of freight and mail, the Graf Zeppelin left Lakehurst, N. J., Monday night for the return trip to Friedrichshafen. She had a pleasant and swift passage across the Atlantic until she neared the coast of Portugal, where a storm and heavy winds were encountered. It is hoped that the Zeppelin will be in Chicago late in August as one of the attractions at the national air races to be held there.

W. CAMERON FORBES, Boston banker and former governor general of the Philippines, has been tentatively selected as the new ambassador to Japan, according to information learned in administration circles. Mr. Forbes, a close friend of President Hoover, served as chairman of the special commission which recently completed a survey and report on the American administration of affairs in Haiti.

IN RECOGNITION of his "outstanding contributions in the many fields of human service," the Louis Livingstone Seaman gold medal was presented to President Hoover by the American Museum of Safety. The award of the medal was decided upon before Mr. Hoover's nomination for the Presidency but the formal presentation was delayed.

Glories of Athens

"Porch of Maidens," the Acropolis.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

RECALLING its century of modern independence and its thousands of years of glorious memories, Greece is celebrating its centennial. The republic of today has an area of approximately 49,000 square miles and a population of some 6,000,000. But the memories of past glories cling chiefly to the Plain of Attica, surrounded by its hills, with "Athens, the eye of Greece," as its center.

To every one sensitive to historical suggestion, to every one to whom beauty makes the supreme appeal, the first sight of this immortal city becomes the moment of a lifetime.

To the right rises Hymettus, famed now, as in ancient days, for the honey which the bees rife from its flowers; to the left, and nearer, the island of Salamis, with its deathless memories; a bowshot away, Pagitalla, where Aristides and his hand cut down the flower of Persian chivalry, after the naval battle of Salamis; still farther to the left, the ranges of Parnes, extending in a full, voluptuous curve toward the east.

As one looks closer, the city reveals itself more clearly and, out-topping all, the Acropolis, with the Parthenon as its diadem. In its still beauty, its majesty and its tenderness, the scene has a vague unreality.

It is a tiny country, this heart of Greece. The Attic plain stretches from the sea in an irregular oval from south to north; the entire province contains a bare 700 square miles. Tet Attica "balances in the universe the glory of Imperial Rome." "Remember well, Quintus," writes Cicero to his friend, "that you have command over the Greeks, who have civilized all peoples, in teaching them gentleness and humanity, and to whom Rome owes the light she possesses." Cicero, of course, meant Attica, for it was in this little country that what we call the Greek genius was most effectively at work in the Fifth century B. C.

Moments of the Past. When the visitor fares forth in Athens the past beckons to him. One of the first classic monuments his eyes are likely to rest upon is the Arch of Hadrian. This emperor, who will be recalled, was one of the principal benefactors of Athens in the value and character of his gifts. These embraced a water supply, a reservoir which is in use today, a library, and perhaps the Temple to Olympian Zeus. He also built the new city beyond the old one, and the arch marked the dividing line between the Greek and Roman towns.

Passing through the arch and turning to the right, one enters the precincts of the Temple of Zeus. The temple, like the buildings on the Acropolis, is of Pentelic marble, to which time has given an exquisite golden brown color, especially on the side which faces the sea. Two of the columns stand detached like sentinels, and by a happy accident close the three-mile tangent formed by the Synagoga avenue, which links up modern Athens with its little seaside resort, Phaleron.

One can trace his steps through the Arch of Hadrian by a narrow street known as the Street of Lycairates which is probably the site of the ancient Street of the Tripods. In the age of Pericles, apart from the athletic contests which took place at the Olympic and other games, there were contests in oratory, in poetry, and in music. At Athens the victor in one of these games was given a brass tripod, with the privilege of erecting a pedestal on which to place it, somewhere in the city.

At the end of the little street stands, in almost pristine loveliness, perhaps the only surviving monument of this character. It is the exquisite little structure—the oldest extant—erected by an Athenian, Lycairates, on which to place the tripod awarded him as the organizer of a choir of young men which won a prize in vocal music in one of the games in the Fourth century B. C.

Theater of Dionysus. This little structure was built into a convent in medieval times and was thus preserved from destruction. The convent was standing in Byron's day and he was a guest there in 1811; it was not until some years later that the monument was restored at the expense of the French government.

It is but a stone's throw from the Monument of Lycairates to the Theater of Dionysus—or Bacchus, to give it its Roman name. Leaving the theater, one walks to the inevitable goal, passing on the right the precincts of Aesculapius and various remains, including the charming Odellon built by Herod of Attica, another Roman benefactor, of the Second century, A. D., and on to the Iron gates which mark the lower precincts of the Acropolis. Passing through these and walking up the long incline, one comes to a turning on the right and sees ahead the gates, or Propylaea, of the Acropolis.

High up on the right is the little Temple of the Wingless Victory, while a corner of the Parthenon can be described over the retaining wall. A steep stairway which leads from the outer gate of the Propylaea to the upper level must be climbed before one reaches the platform on which is the Victory temple. Perfection of the Victory Temple. The view outward from this platform is marvelous, but the shrine compels attention. Nothing can exceed in delicacy and charm this exquisite little structure. Four Ionic columns, each some 13 feet in height, support the architecture, but so perfect are their proportions that it is only when standing beside them that one realizes that they are twice the height of a tall man.

This diminutive, yet perfect edifice was demolished by the Turks in order to build a bastion, and was later reconstructed with the fragments of the original building. The portico commands a superb view of the Saronic gulf; at every turn names familiar as household words came to the observer's lips—Salamis, the Bay of Eleusis, the domelike rock of Acorinth, Aegina, and in the distance the soft line of hills marking the Peloponnesus.

Turn again and you will face the Porch of Maidens—the Caryatids. These are too familiar to everyone to require any description and elaboration, but, as with other Greek sculptures, are admired wholeheartedly. The perfection of the draperies, the radiant youth animating the figures, the dressing of the hair, massed to give added strength to the neck, are a few of the elements of loveliness. A dozen paces from the Erechtheum, whose portico stands today in almost unimpaired beauty, are the walls built by Themistocles after the destruction of the first temple by the Persians in 480 B. C. In it were used a number of the drums of the ancient columns.

Immediately below these walls lies a little hill which is pointed out as the Areopagus, or Hill of Mars. Physically, the place is of little interest. There is a short flight of steps cut in the rock, and at the top are the sites of ancient altars.

The ancient Court of the Areopagus, consisting of venerable and eminent Athenian citizens, held its sittings on this hill, and it is usually assumed that it was from here that St. Paul, the future captive of Imperial Rome, in A. D. 64 spoke to Athenian skeptics with a reference to an altar "To the Unknown God."

SERVING MANY BUSINESSES

Experience of large fleet owners reveals the unusual reliability and economy of the new Ford

A SIGNIFICANT TRIBUTE to the value of the new Ford is found in its increasing use by Federal, state and city governments and by large industrial companies which keep careful day-by-day cost records. In most instances, the Ford has been chosen only after exhaustive tests of every factor that contributes to good performance—speed, power, safety, comfort, low cost of operation and up-keep, reliability and long life.

Prominent among the companies using the Ford are the Associated Companies of the Bell System, Armour and Company, The Borden Company, Continental Baking Corporation, Firestone Tire and Rubber Company, General Electric Company, Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company, Kellogg Company, Knickerbocker Ice Company, Morton Salt Company, Pillsbury Flour Mills Company, The Procter and Gamble Company, and Swift & Company.

Each of these companies uses a large number of Ford cars and trucks. The Associated Companies of the Bell System use more than eight thousand.

Modern business moves at a fast pace and it needs the Ford. Daily, in countless ways and places, it helps to speed the production and delivery of the world's goods and extend the useful service of men and companies.

Constant, steady operation over many thousands of miles emphasizes the advantages of the sound design of the Ford car, its high quality of materials, and unusual accuracy in manufacturing. Beneath its graceful lines and beautiful colors there is a high degree of mechanical excellence.

An example of the value built into the Ford is the use of more than twenty ball and roller bearings. They are hidden within the car and you may never see them. Yet they play an important part in satisfactory, economical performance. Their function is similar to the jewels of a fine watch.

Throughout the Ford chassis, a ball or roller bearing is used at every place where it is needed to reduce friction and wear and give smooth, reliable mechanical operation.

At many points, as on the transmission counter-shaft, clutch release, fan and pump shaft, and front drive shaft, these ball and roller bearings are used where less costly types of bearings might be considered adequate.

Additional instances of the high quality built into the Ford are the extensive use of steel forgings, fully enclosed four-wheel brakes, Rustless Steel, four Hondaile double-acting hydraulic shock absorbers, aluminum pistons, chrome silicon alloy valves, torque-tube drive, three-quarter floating rear axle, and the Triplex shatter-proof glass windshield.

The Ford policy has always been to use the best possible material for each part and then, through large production, give it to the public at low cost.

Poplar Springs News

Will you please allow me a small space in your paper this week, as it has been some time since I have had anything to say. First, I want to say that our church and Sunday School are getting along nicely, but we are sorry to say that we have lost one of our faithful members, Brother McDowell. He was one of the deacons of Poplar Springs church, and was loyal to the church and Sunday school. He will be greatly missed in his church and community in which he lived, but the Lord knows best.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Gilliland had a reunion on last Sunday and all of their children took dinner with them. The oldest one, McKinley, lives in Birmingham. He returned home Saturday with his new bride, and returned to Birmingham Sunday to his home where he has been for the last five years. Mr. Grover Gilliland and wife, and little son, Alton, Newton Gilliland and wife and little daughter, Willodean, Leslie Gilliland and wife, who reside in Sylacauga. Mr. D. L. Gilmore and wife and little son from Mineral Springs.

It is grand to have a meeting like this. We are always glad to meet them and enjoy a few hours together and that is all right and good, but parents should always try to live in a way and teach their children to live in a way that when they are departed from this life that they can meet in a better world than this.

I will try to write again.

Negro Guilty, Assault Charge To Die July 11

"I Didn't Do It" Declares Defendant When Judge Sentences Him

Montgomery, Ala., June 10.—Returning a verdict of guilty after two and a half hours of deliberation, a jury in Circuit Court here yesterday convicted Mose Daniels, 19-year-old negro, of criminally attacking a young Montgomery white woman and decreed that he should die in the electric chair. The jury reported at 6:30 p. m. and in less than 15 minutes, surrounded by members of a National Guard Company from Birmingham, sheriff's deputies and state law enforcement officers, Judge Leon McCord summoned the condemned negro before the bar and sentenced him to death in the chair on July 11, 1930.

When asked if he had anything to say why the sentence of law should not be passed upon him, Daniels replied, "I just want to say that it ain't right to kill me for something I didn't do." After a few brief remarks to the judge the negro was escorted from the packed courtroom under heavy guard, loaded into one of the two National Guard buses and carried back to Kilby Prison.

Signs Death Warrant

Gibson Nettles, foreman of the jury, signed the negro's death warrant. Other members of the jury were David R. Findley, Robert E. Gorrie, W. M. Lucas, W. P. McGehee, Jr., Charles F. Bennett, A. Pugh Broadway, Cecil W. Cook, Thomas H. Florence, L. L. Prince, Joseph Ross and George A. Wright.

The case was first on the docket when court opened at 10 a. m. Testimony was completed at 1:15 p. m. and after state and defense counsel had presented arguments, retired at 2:30. Judge McCord instructed them to elect a foreman, go to lunch and resume deliberations at 3:30 p. m.

Solicitor W. T. Seibels asked for the death penalty, frequently referring in his closing argument to the "hot chair at Kilby." The state's conviction was obtained largely on the strength of an alleged confession made by Daniels after he was arrested and placed in Kilby Prison. Sheriff John L. Scogin, Deputy Sam Stearns, Deputy Warden Frank Boswell and Solicitor W. T. Seibels all testified that the negro confessed to the crime in their presence at Kilby. Seibels was placed on the stand as a defense witness.

Chilton County Abstract Co.

M. D. FOSHEE, Manager

A good business man will not buy a farm or any property without first looking it over to see what it is worth. However, some will buy or loan money on land without an abstract.

Isn't it equally as foolish to buy a farm without looking it over as to buy it and not know whether the titles are good or not? Without an abstract you do not know where you are getting the land you look at or not.

Before investing in land in any way have an abstract made and be safe.

WOMAN BACTERIOLOGIST'S EXPERIMENTS AT ANDALUSIA ATTRACT SCIENTISTS ATTENTION

For two years in Andalusia a series of experiments on water contamination and pollution have been carried on under direction of a woman whose work has drawn interest of the health scientists of the nation.

The woman is Mrs. Elfreda Caldwell, a bacteriologist of long experience, she took up the work several months ago when her husband, originally assigned to conduct the experiments, became disabled through illness.

Her work is not yet complete. Her findings, however, as reported to health scientists, indicate that the medical world is soon to know with unquestioned accuracy to what extent, if any, a well of water may become the source of typhoid and other diseases through soil seepage.

To observe her work and note the results of her experiments thus far, three noted scientists arrived in Montgomery Sunday en route to Andalusia, where they remained through Monday.

The scientists are, Dr. John A. Farrell and Dr. Frederick F. Russell, fellows of the Rockefeller Foundation, which has financed the experiments at Andalusia, and Dr. E. O. Jordan, of the University of Chicago.

Three wells 15 feet deep have been used. The wells were sunk in sandy soil, this type of soil presumably having been chosen because of its porosity and ready adaptability to seepage. Sewage was placed on all sides of the wells and periodic tests and searches for bacteria were conducted by Mrs. Caldwell and her two assistants.

Her tests so far, it is said, have given rise to a question of whether a well may really become contaminated with the typhus bacillus and disease producing bacilli through seepage, and whether the soil doesn't act as a filter for germs.

The work has been done through the cooperation of the State Health Department Engineering Bureau of which George Hazlehurst is chief.

At a joint hearing to be held some time within the next two weeks, Gov. Graves and members of the State Board of Pardons will give all interested persons an opportunity to submit statements either for or against executive clemency for any or all of the three condemned prisoners now at Kilby awaiting execution in the electric chair on Friday, June 20.

The prisoners are Leroy Miles, Jack Brown and Edgar Harris. All are negroes and all are under sentence of death for murder. Brown and Harris were convicted in Marengo County. Miles was found guilty of the killing of J. F. Barbaree, former city marshal at Union Springs. Following the fatal shooting of the marshal, Miles escaped. Months later he was captured in Chicago and brought back to Alabama for trial.

HENRY W. SWEET

For Commissioner Agriculture and Industries

Henry W. Sweet, who has announced for Commissioner of Agriculture and Industries in the August primary, is a young business man of Bessemer, and qualified and equipped for this position. A background of colorful training and experience has developed in him, qualities which fit him for this office. He has unusual personality an executive ability. In contact throughout his youth with agriculture, he completed a successful career at Auburn where he graduated with a B. S. Degree in agriculture. He has also had valuable experience in Horticulture and Nursery inspection work.

He is a member of Alpha Gamma Rho and Gamma Sigma Delta agricultural fraternities. He was connected with the Purina Mills as a specialist in animal husbandry, feeds and feeding and for some time traveled Alabama, conducting demonstrations and tests. His work over the state has given him a keen insight into farming and industrial problems.

At home he is identified closely with the best civic interests, heading many community undertakings in an executive capacity, and being recognized as an astute organizer.

He has also been active in Masonic and church affairs of his home section where he is known to have no obligation to impair his ability in the administration of the duties of the office he seeks.—Bessemer Tribune-Advertiser, Mar. 4, 1930.

SCHOOL CHILDREN PAY OVER HALF MILLION TUITION FEES

That the revenue for public education as provided by the State of Alabama was not sufficient to maintain schools in keeping with recognized standards for the year 1928-1929 is proved by the fact that during that year the sum of $570,953 was collected from students as tuition fees. Of this sum $430,979 was collected by the rural schools, $104,392 was collected by the city schools, and $35,582 was collected by the agricultural high schools.

Thirty-four of the forty-five city school systems reported tuition fees collected in total amounts that vary from $6,000 to $18,894 for the year. Only three of the sixty-seven counties, Mobile, Lee and Dallas, reported no collection of tuition fees. The highest county collection reported was $47,905.

In addition to the $570,953 reported as fees the sum of $341,718 was provided as contributions, gifts and bequests. Of this amount $51,546 was reported by city schools and $290,172 reported by rural schools.

Miss Parnell Wins Honors At College

Montevallo, Ala., June 10.—The distinction of being one of the 51 counties to be represented in the student honor list for the third quarter of the year just closed at Alabama College was won for Chilton County by Miss Elizabeth Parnell, of Maplesville.

Miss Parnell was paid special honor during the recent Commencement exercises at the College, on account of being the first graduate of the college whose mother is also a graduate of the institution.

The combined first and second honors list, with 161 names, was the largest of the year, and represented 51 of the 66 counties included in the enrollment for the year.

The year just closed also marked the highest enrollment in the history of the college. The number reached 873 during the year.

Enrollment at this time for the session of 1930-31 is more than 100 in excess of the number registered at the same time last year, according to the President O. C. Carmichael, who predicts that a large number of applicants will have to be denied entrance this fall, on account of lack of room.

Opening simultaneously with the 15th annual Summer School Monday, was the school of instruction for high school home economics teachers of the state, with about 50 in attendance; and the annual Writers' Conclave, which brought many prominent men and women of letters for a three-day conference on the campus.

New features of the Summer school will be the initial courses in graduate work in the field of home economics, and the nursery school work, under Miss Anna Payne, director of the pre-school laboratory at Berea College, Kentucky.

Nursery school work will likely be continued permanently, President O. C. Carmichael stated. Graduate work in home economics and other fields, also, seems likely to be demanded in the near future as a part of the permanent instruction to be obtained at Alabama College, he added.

FARMER GETS $1,940 FROM THREE ACRES DEWBERRIES

Oneonta, Ala., June 12.—Last year Weaver Gamble, staunch farm bureau member and progressive farmer of Renlop, Alabama, Route 1, sold $1940 worth of dewberries and dewberry plants from three acres of land.

This year Mr. Gamble has four acres producing berries from which he expects a return of some $3,000. He sells his berries in Birmingham, which is less than an hour drive from his farm. J. L. Giles, County Agent, Birmingham, works very closely with Mr. Gamble in producing and marketing the berries.

"The beauty of growing dewberries is the fact that most of the return is profit since most of the work in producing them is done in the winter time when the farmer has nothing else to do," Mr. Gamble said. The berries require a little fertilizer, a little cultivation and then they are to harvest and market, which takes very little time and expense, he stated.

RULES OF THE GAME

Many rules for the government of human conduct have been laid down, and all of them have been broken. Still it isn't a bad idea to think about some of them occasionally, and if possible give the sensible ones a trial.

An exchange prints a few, attributed to Walter Johnson, famed pitcher and manager of the Washington Senators, and while they particularly apply to the game of baseball, the principles enunciated are equally applicable to the game of life in general. Johnson says: "Play fair; be on the level. "Have respect for discipline. "Never alibi for failure; accept the breaks of the game as they come. "Grit your teeth and bear down when things look toughest. "Live cleanly.

Boys Like Belts on Their Clothes

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

In the effort to do away with some of the usual complicated fastenings on small boys' suits, clothing specialists of the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture have eliminated several types of belts and are suggesting improvements in others. The belts that had to be put through a succession of loops around the waist, some of them out of reach in back, were especially aggravating. This type of belt had to be pulled out and put back whenever the trousers were unfastened.

Nevertheless, having a belt of some sort may be a very real pleasure to some small lads. They will not be very critical about the construction of it, just so it is a belt. The bureau has designed a very satisfactory and practical kind of belt that does not have to be released at all when the front drop is used. It is shown in the accompanying illustration.

The facing of the back is extended to the center front where it buttons securely, easily and attractively. Only one more button is needed than when the facing stops at the side plackets. When the side buttons are set forward no straps are needed for holding the belt in position.

In this style of trousers a front drop is formed by slashing each side of the front section to form slanting plackets. These openings are finished to simulate welt pockets and the buttons at the top of each can be buttoned without undoing the belt. This general type of trouser with a front drop has been found excellent for the child who is being trained to dress and undress himself. Clothing specialists recommend that only one style be

CAUSE OF CRACKS IN FLOOR

Cracks in a new well-laid floor are the result of a change in moisture content within the wood itself. This change is due to improper preliminary seasoning; improper storage conditions at the mill or retail yard; delivery of the flooring during wet weather or before the masonry or plaster walls are dry; or it may be due to the absorption of moisture from the air within the building either before or after the flooring is laid. The use of the heating plant may be advisable, says the United States forest service, to maintain a temperature that will prevent excessive humidity in the building from the time the flooring is delivered until the house is occupied.

Hints About Good Things to Eat

By NELLIE MAXWELL

"If you think you are beaten you are. If you think you dare not, you don't. If you like to win, but you think you can't, it's almost a cinch you won't."

In the spring and early summer green foods—fresh vegetables and fruit—are more appealing than more complicated foods. There are some roughage foods that are needed all the year round and an occasional use of bran to food, or taken in water as a drink, will keep the elimination good. For the children the bran may be given in small cakes, cookies and macarons.

Bran Date Muffins.—Break two eggs into a mixing bowl and beat with an egg beater for two minutes; add two-thirds of a cupful of milk, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one-fourth cupful of sugar and one-fourth cupful of softened shortening. Add two teaspoonfuls of baking powder to one cupful of flour, add one cupful of bran, one-half cupful each of dates cut fine, and one-half cupful of nutmeats cut fine. Mix all as usual and beat well. Bake in well greased muffin pans for twenty-five minutes.

Liver Sandwiches.—Rub cooked liver while hot through a sieve, season used at first with buttons always in the same place, so that the child will learn to manipulate every button without aid. Later on variations and changes in style may be introduced. The blouse of this suit has a very simple one-button opening. The belt in sleeves clear the elbows and are loose enough to permit all normal activity. A flat collar facing and sleeve finish matches the trousers.

Another Way to Serve Eggplant

Here's an eggplant recipe from the bureau of home economics which may be new to those who have always fried this vegetable.

- | | |
|------------------|----------------|
| 1 large eggplant | 1 quart canned |
| 4 tbs. butter or | or chopped raw |
| other fat | tomatoes |
| 1 green pepper, | 2 tsp. salt |
| chopped | Pepper |
| 1 small onion, | 1 cup bread |
| chopped | crumbs |

Pare the eggplant and cut it into small, even pieces. Melt 2 tablespoonfuls of the fat in a skillet, add the green pepper and onion, and cook for a few minutes. Add the tomatoes, eggplant, salt, and pepper, cook for ten minutes and place the mixture in a shallow greased baking dish. Melt the remaining fat in a skillet, stir in the bread crumbs, and sprinkle the crumbs over the eggplant. Bake in a moderate oven for 15 minutes, or until the eggplant is tender and the crumbs are browned.

Evening Fairy Tale for the Children

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

The button bush flowers aren't like the big buttons one sees in a work box.

So, really, there is no special reason for such a name. Each button bush plant has a great, many flowers upon it and each one of these flowers is filled with the most delicious honey.

There was going to be a banquet that day, and the banquet table was to be the bush.

It was being held in the swamp where the bush grew. Perhaps you could say that the many, many flowers on the button bush looked a little bit like very small buttons, but anyway each of these flowers was filled with the most delicious honey.

"When is the banquet to begin?" asked one little flower.

"In a very short time," said the Button Bush.

"Patience, though, little flowers. The guests will come soon."

"Who are the guests to be?" asked the flowers.

"All the little insects of the swamp," said the Button Bush.

"Oh, goodie!" they said. "It will be a great and magnificent banquet, a great and gay banquet."

And they all looked very happy. At last the guests began to arrive, and once they had started to come it seemed as though they would never stop.

Of course, they held banquets every day in the swamp, and many times a day, but this was a very special banquet.

One little insect was seated upon the edge of a tiny button bush flower. "Will you tell me a secret?" asked the insect.

"What is it?" asked the flower.

"Ah, it's a secret you all have; but if you will tell me I will promise to tell only my friends and companions, the insects."

"You don't mind if we know. We're all such friends."

"What secret have we that you

Guests Began to Arrive.

want to know?" asked the little flower.

"Ah, why one, why one, you know," said the insect.

The flower moved a little in the breeze. "Have another good sip of honey and I will tell you," said the flower.

"That's an easy command to obey," said the insect.

That very handsome drooping brim, first in the picture, with its modish shallow crown which has white roses posed at the back, combines the ultra-new coarse straw with fine Milan in its making.

Another black Milan mushroom-brim model is shown to the right. It is trimmed with pink velvet ribbon. If any color is smarter combined with black than white, that color is pink, turquoise, or light blue following next in order.

The Milan down in the left-hand corner is made in sections which are fastened together by hand. Quite a considerable fastening is being employed by the milliner both in connection with straw and with fabric. The little bow at the side on the hat portrayed is of straw.

Lacy straws distinguish the two other models shown. The dressy chapeau in the center has a fancy straw crown, a network of black and white horsehair forming the brim. A band and underbrim bow of black velvet completes this model.

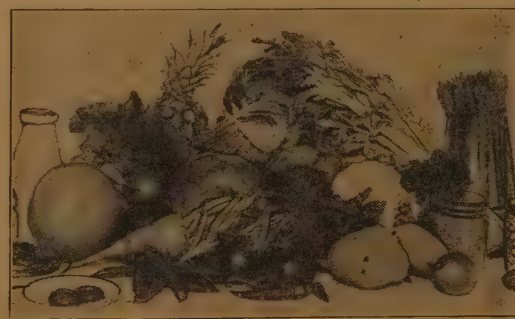

Natural colored crocheted Tuscan straw is mounted on a black horsehair cloche for the concluding hat.

Some Facts About Vitamins

Several Common Sources of Vitamin B.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Our knowledge about vitamins has been undergoing constant expansion. It is still far from complete. First came recognition of the fact that in natural food materials there existed, in minute quantities, certain substances other than proteins, fats, carbohydrates and salts, which appeared to be essential for normal nutrition. Further investigation showed that these substances, or vitamins, also prevented various pathological conditions or "deficiency diseases." Early in the work these separate vitamins were identified, and called A, B, and C. Each one had functions peculiar to itself. Several years later two more vitamins, D and E, were discovered. Comparatively recently it has been found that another vitamin, named G, occurs in a great many foods which are also rich in vitamin B. The identification of vitamin G was obscured for a long time because of this parallel occurrence.

The functions of the two vitamins

"We are very, very shy," said the flower. "Yes, all the flowers on each of the button bush flowers are so shy that they want to keep away from people."

"We have been told we would make lovely garden flowers and that people would admire us."

"They say we are so fragrant and sweet and that we are pretty to look at."

"All of which is true," said the insect, making a low bow, and taking another little sip of honey.

"But somehow we love the swamps best. They are so quiet. People don't come to the swamps so much, and we are so shy. People are nice, we haven't a doubt, but we like to be off by ourselves and so we always grow in the swamps where there are no houses, but where there are lots of insects."

"We like insects. They enjoy our delicious honey—for we can't help boasting a little of our honey, which every tiny flower has, and we like to give our honey to the insects."

"We help them and they help us. We all love each other. The insects come to us because they hear of our rare honey and because we are so fragrant that they are drawn to us."

"But, little insects, do not feel sad if the world doesn't see us, and because the world can't share with you our fragrance."

"We are shy, we have always been shy, and we will always be shy."

"But the people in the world outside the swamps have many beautiful things to look at and enjoy and we want to help along the swamps which aren't always so nice."

"And we love to give banquets. Yes, little insect, the button bush and the insect family are great friends when they meet in a good old out-of-the-way swamp!"

HELPS FOR HOUSEKEEPERS

Keep the percolator clean and well stirred. Coffee left standing will stain the inside and may spoil the flavor of the best brand.

Place woollen garments which are to be dried indoors at some distance from the stove or radiator, as excess heat shrinks them.

Careless preparation of vegetables, especially over-cooking, is often responsible for the unappetizing results that find their way to many tables.

Overloading the washing machine is hard on both clothes and machine and makes the machine work less efficiently.

When making a circular skirt, let it hang from the waist band for a day or two before finishing it off at the bottom. This allows the bias seams to stretch, and the skirt will not be as likely to sag after it is finished.

Eat Less Meat

Though practically the same amount of food is needed in summer and winter, the kind is somewhat different. Since meat and fish create body heat, it is wise to eat less meat in summer and to obtain the necessary amounts of protein from eggs, milk, cheese, vegetables and whole wheat products.

Lesson for June 15

JESUS ON THE CROSS

LESSON TEXT.—Matthew 27:1-58. GOLDEN TEXT.—Looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God.

PRIMARY TOPIC.—Jesus on the Cross. JUNIOR TOPIC.—Jesus on the Cross. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC.—The Suffering of the Cross. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC.—Calvary.

The grand climax of the six months' lessons is reached in this one. To miss the significance of the crucifixion of Christ will be to render valueless all the preceding lessons. It is not a matter of learning the lessons taught by a great teacher or imitating the examples of a great and good man, but of apprehending the atonement made by the world's Redeemer.

I. The Place of Crucifixion. (vv. 33, 34).

They led Him away to Golgotha, a hill north of Jerusalem, resembling a skull. He was crucified "without the gate" (Heb. 13:12). At first He was compelled to bear His own cross, but when physical weakness made it impossible for Him to continue, they compelled Simon the Cyrenian to bear it for Him (v. 32). In order to strengthen Him for the ordeal before He was nailed to the cross, the soldiers ofered Him a stimulant of vinegar mixed with gall. He refused the stimulant offered and consciously drank the cup of sin to its bitter dregs.

II. Gambling for the Clothing of the Lord (vv. 35, 36).

It was the custom for the soldiers who had charge of a crucifixion to receive the garments of the one crucified. We have here a fulfillment of Psalm 22:18. What sacrifice for them to gamble for His seamless robe under the very cross where He was dying!

III. The Accusation (v. 37).

It was customary to place over the victim on the cross his name and indicate his crime. This superscription was placed over Jesus by Pilate to vex the Jews. He was their King in absolute truth. They had long looked for Him and now, when He had come, this is the kind of treatment they gave Him.

IV. Two Malefactors Crucified With Him (v. 38).

We are not told who they were. Perhaps they belonged to the band of Barabbas. This was another fulfillment of Scripture (Isa. 53:12). In these three crosses we have set forth a spiritual history of the whole world.

V. The Dying Savior Reviled (vv. 39-44).

This reviling was engaged in by the passerby, the chief priests, the scribes, elders, and the malefactors who were crucified with Him.

1. "He saved others, Himself He cannot save" (v. 42).

This jest was meant to show the absurdity of Jesus' claims, but it demonstrated them and showed the reason for His suffering. He could not save Himself and others, so He chose to give Himself to save others.

2. "If he be the king of Israel, let him now come down from the cross" (v. 42). His refusal to abandon the cross established His rightful claims. The devil offered Him the kingdoms of the world if He would escape the cross (Matt. 4:8-10). Through His death He came into His place of kingship over all who bow to Him.

3. "He trusted in God. Let him deliver him now" (v. 43).

His obedience unto death was the sacrifice which met God's full approval.

VI. The Death of Christ (vv. 45-50).

Who is sufficient to comment upon this tragedy! Let us contemplate it in adoration and wonder. So shocking was this crime that nature threw around the Son of God a shroud that the godless company could not gaze upon him. Darkness was upon the land at noonday. Upon the termination of the darkness, He cried with a loud voice, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me!" He became sin for the world and the world's sin hid God's face from Him. God forsook Him, turned from Him who had taken the sinner's place. God was dealing with sin on the innocent substitute. No one can understand that but God, but we can believe. When the price of sin was paid, He cried out with a loud voice, showing that He still had vitality; that His death was not from exhaustion, but by His sovereign will. He yielded up the ghost and sent away His spirit.

Kindness

Full half our holiness is shown in simple, everyday relations with our fellow men; and nine times out of ten the best immediate expression for our love of God and gratitude to Christ is found in some little kindness to our neighbor.—Isaac Edwards.

TRY FIRST TO BUY IT AT HOME

NOT an unreasonable request from men who are devoting their every effort and investing both time and money to provide a home town market where you may do your buying and selling.

THEY simply ask that when you are in need of anything they carry, that you TRY first to buy it at home. If they can not serve you, then go elsewhere. But in fairness to yourself, your home, your community and to the men striving to make this a town of which both you and they may be proud, TRY first at home.

IT IS the home town merchant who rejoices with you when times are good ---stands by you when times are hard. He is your friend and wants to give you a full dollar's worth for every dollar you spend with him.

STATE CAPITOL NEWS

An energetic drive against the malaria menace, which has been increasingly destructive in Alabama and other southern states during the last two years, is being launched by the State Health Department. Dr. J. N. Baker, State Health Officer, has called on all citizens to cooperate in the undertaking, and the best efforts of the medical and engineering staff of the Health Department will be devoted to bringing about a reduction in the disease.

Alabama's malaria control program this year contemplates a concentration of a central field force in eleven counties of the State, from which 38 per cent of the deaths from malaria in the entire State were reported last year. Within these eleven counties, the work will be divided into three phases. The new drug, plasmoquin, which has proven effective elsewhere, will be used in the treatment of cases and carriers of the disease. This part of the program will be carried out particularly in parts of Montgomery and Macon counties. A second phase of activity, to secure the screening of dwelling on a wide scale, will be applied especially in Colbert, Clarke and Houston counties. This screening program calls not only for screening of doors and windows, but rendering walls and chimneys mosquito proof. The county health officers of these three counties, and four members of the State Health staff, have been sent to Mississippi to observe methods used there for excluding the mosquito.

Six other counties, Dallas, Geneva, Marengo, Pickens, Wilcox and Washington, have a malaria problem of moment, according to public health authorities. In these counties the campaign for the present season will be largely educational. This part of the program will include the use of motion pictures on an extensive scale to give information on methods of prevention.

The sum of approximately $6,000 has been set aside by the State Health Department for use in the anti-malaria campaign. Dr. Baker, in a general letter to all doctors of the State, has outlined the plan of malaria control activities, centering in the eleven counties listed above, and added: "In making the selection it was not our intention to discriminate against any county not included in the list."

standing our plan to concentrate in the eleven counties, some help can perhaps be given you should a specialized problem of malaria control arise. I trust you will give such time to the inauguration of control work in your county as the problem appears to warrant." One of the keynotes in the malaria control program, Dr. Baker pointed out, is the definite location by the malaria survey of the areas where malaria transmission is occurring. "In counties where there is a malaria problem at least one focus, or a part of one, should be surveyed," the State Health Officer wrote. "Such methods, it appears, are essential to the proper direction of efforts at control." A certain amount of outside laboratory aid in the examination of blood slides has been promised. Dr. Baker said, and doctors over the State who contemplate taking an extensive number in their survey work are requested to advise the State Health Department in advance as to the approximate number and the time they are to be sent in.

In Alabama and throughout the South there was a general increase in number of cases of malaria in 1929 over the preceding year. Climatic conditions last year, when large areas were flooded, were favorable to the mosquito, in addition to which it must be taken into consideration that malaria, like some other diseases, has a tendency to come in "waves" with the extent of its prevalence in some years others difficult to definitely account for. Deaths from the disease in Alabama more than doubled in the last two years, the number of deaths reported in 1927 being 204, 1928, 291, and 1929, 428. Aside from the loss of life, there is the serious problem presented by the fact that malaria is a disabling disease, causing a heavy loss of time and efficiency, a loss which in the rural sections comes when labor is badly needed on the farm.

The new drug, plasmoquin, which will be used in malaria treatment was perfected in Germany. It comes in tablet form, and is an ally of quinine and used in conjunction with it. It has been tried extensively by the United Fruit Co., on its banana plantations in the tropics, giving good results.

With State health authorities doing their utmost to halt the ravages of malaria, the point is stressed that the problem presented is of such nature that the active cooperation of citizens and communities is essential to success.

State Will Build To Health Office

More office space is to be provided at the State Health Department thru the building of additions on which work is to begin at once.

A single-story wing will be erected at the East side of the department building and another story will be added to each of the one story additions which now flank the entrance to the building from Dexter Avenue. Present space is also to be rearranged and more shelving will be added in the basement.

Contract for this work was let Friday by the state board of administration to J. R. Bruner of Montgomery, at $2,987.

Hands Show 'Age' And Neglect Unless Cleansed And Protected

OF ALL the things that you can do at home to preserve a good appearance, nothing is more important than the care of your hands. Most women, however, think of their faces first. If little lines and wrinkles begin to appear, and the skin on their faces darkens and coarsens, they immediately take steps to remedy this. Of course we all want to keep our faces fresh and youthful just as long as possible. That is as it should be. But did you ever realize that your hands can betray age and neglect, too? This so often is unnecessary, for your hands can be kept young as well as your face.

After your daily facial treatment, thoroughly rub into your hands the remaining tissue cream or skin food and muscle oil, smoothing and gripping your hands as if you were washing them. Rub each finger from the tip to the base, and push back your cuticle so it will not be tight or ugly. If you do this just before going to bed, slip on an old pair of gloves and wear them all night. In the morning wash your hands with mild soap and warm water. But if you take this hand massage before going out, wash your hands with warm water and mild soap immediately after the massage, and then apply hand cream.

Before manicuring your nails, always apply skin food or tissue cream to your nails, and rub it in well. Then gently push back the cuticle with an orange stick. Be careful not to bruise your nails, and do not, as a rule, cut your cuticle. That only makes it tough and hard, and gives your nails a careless, untidy look. But if the cuticle is very ragged, and you must cut it off, use your cuticle scissors instead of your nail scissors. Then again rub in tissue cream, or skin food, as plenty of lubrication soon will cure any tendency to hangnails and ragged cuticle.

If your hands are rough and dry, instead of washing them too often with soap and water, try a basic cleansing occasionally to cleanse your skin without drying up its natural oils.

For this basic cleansing, first apply a liberal amount of cleansing cream to your hands, and after a minute remove the cream with soft cleansing tissues. Next, just as in your daily facial cleansing, smooth pads of cotton saturated with skin tonic over your hands. This will remove all traces of cleansing cream, but never will leave your skin feeling drawn and dry. Last of all, apply a bit of hand cream to whiten your hands gently without leaving them sticky or greasy.

New Postoffice Survey Slated

Washington, June 6.—A survey of more than a dozen Alabama cities to determine their requirements for new postoffice buildings or enlargement of present facilities will be made this summer by experts representing the Treasury and Postoffice Departments it became known Friday. The survey will be made the basis of recommendations for allocations to Alabama from the additional $150,000,000 for public buildings that Congress authorized last spring.

Montgomery is among allocations ahead made.

Senator Black, who had presented the claims of several Alabama cities for new buildings, was informed Friday by Treasury officials that agents under the direction of Postoffice Inspector F. R. Martin at Chattanooga will conduct the surveys this summer and submit reports which will be studied by the interdepartmental committee next fall and winter. Surveys will be made at Albertville, Attalla and Sylacauga where the Federal Government already owns sites; and at Auburn, Athens, Brewton, and Fairfield where no sites are owned but where postoffice buildings have been suggested. Surveys also will be made at Anniston, Dothan, Florence, Gadsden, Huntsville and Mobile to determine whether additional facilities are needed.

THE CHILD WHO DRINKS MILK

By Dr. Christmas Seal

The "undulent fever" scare has made some mothers afraid to give their children milk. Nonsense. Children and adults alike profit by milk, but the growing child absolutely must have it. There is no substitute.

Dr. Christmas Seal reminds you that milk from unknown sources should be pasteurized, an excellent measure if properly done. Milk supplies fat, protein, calcium, (lime) phosphorus, iron and all the necessary vitamins. Your child should have a quart of milk daily in addition to other food, and you yourself will find that a milk lunch "peps you up."

INTERESTING NEWS FROM THORSBY

The Thorsby Hotel went up in flames last Saturday morning. The fire caught in the second story and the cause could not be determined. The street was full of people so there was plenty of help and most of the contents of the rooms on the lower floor and the confectionery were saved. The stillness of the air made it possible to keep the nearby buildings from catching. Mr. R. D. Gibbons, the owner and proprietor, has moved his family into one of Mrs. Villadson's twin cottages.

Mr. Gresham Lowery was in town over Sunday on his way from Mobile to Birmingham where he will attend the summer session of Howard College. He is engaged to teach next year in the high school of which Surgeon Kelly is principal. He says if he can arrange to teach nine months and sing the other three he will be very well satisfied.

A Children's Day program will be given at the Congregational church next Sunday morning, June 15, at 11 o'clock. The offering will be for Sunday school extension and should be a generous one.

Plans are being made for a Daily Vacation Bible School to begin June 16th.

Wednesday night, June 18, is the time for our monthly union prayer meeting which this week will be held in the Congregational church.

Mr. and Mrs. A. P. Villadsen of Tuscaloosa were in town Sunday.

The home of Mrs. T. W. Robinson has received as summer guests Miss Virginia Bice and her sister, Eliza. Mary Sue Robinson is also home for the vacation.

Mr. E. N. Bentley has not yet eliminated the building bug from his system. He is now engaged in putting up a good-looking building between his big garage and the city hall. It will be for rent when completed.

Thorsby Institute Items

The campus has not settled down to its usual summer quiet so early as usual this year for several reasons.

Mr. H. W. Wilson and Gerald Smith are finishing a building in which there will be, among other things, rooms for kindling and storage.

Mr. Clyde Meade of E. F. Meade and Son, is replacing the rock bond and pebble-dash on the southwest wall of the dining hall, where the original plaster had buckled and peeled so badly that it had to be entirely removed.

Miss Mary Ella Gerald is using one of the rooms in the school building for coaching some pupils in American Literature.

Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Smith are staying at the boy's cottage with Miss Fairbank this month while Gerald is doing some painting on the Institute buildings. They will go with the Alabama delegation to the Blue Ridge Conference and after that enter the student summer service.

last week with Mrs. C. W. Adams of Prattville.

Miss Agnes Leary has gone to Shocco Springs to take the position which she filled so successfully last summer as social hostess of the Shocco Springs Hotel.

Mr. and Mrs. Hubert Sharpe have taken rooms on the second floor of the Leary home.

Misses Esther and Edith Johnson are in Demorest, Ga., engaged in summer school work at Piedmont College of which the former is a graduate.

Miss Doris Freeman has returned from the same college having just completed her sophomore year.

Misses Hazel Maddox and Annie Lois Arthur, Piedmont freshmen, are going into Student Summer Service under the Congregational Sunday School Extension Board. Miss Maddox will be in Southern Georgia and Miss Arthur in North Carolina. Miss Lorena Primm will take up the same work for the third time this summer. All three will attend the Missionary Education Conference at Blue Ridge, the last of this month and go from there to their different fields of work.

The stopping of No. 4 at our station Saturday night reminded a number of those who heard it that the train was carrying away with it Mr. and Mrs. Aaron Danielson, who will make their future home in Tacoma, Wash. Mr. Danielson is an old and valued resident of Thorsby and his wife has also been here long enough to make many friends. We say farewell and God speed to them with real regret.

Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Peterson, with their son, Jack, returned Saturday from the East where they have been visiting their oldest son in New York City. During Mr. Peterson's absence his place at the L & N Station was taken by J. M. Nix.

DOCTOR PRAISES PRESS

In the opinion of Dr. Bloodgood, eminent cancer specialist of Johns Hopkins University, the newspapers of the country are performing a splendid public service through the publication of health information.

He declares that due to the spread of sound information concerning the teeth, excessive use of stimulants and tobacco, 70 per cent of the patients threatened with cancer now seek medical aid in time to save themselves from actual infection. Before the newspapers aided in disseminating health information, less than 3 per cent sought medical aid in time.

The old idea that a doctor should not give out information to the press, because of an ancient code of ethics, was criticised by Dr. Bloodgood, who believes that the public should be told in plain language whatever of benefit the medical man has to tell. Stressing the importance of attention to the teeth, the doctor said:

"Let the press continue its work. Let it advise every man and woman over 40 to have their teeth X-rayed twice a year. Bad teeth are the most common cause of breakdown."

Through preventive measures the span of human life has been materially lengthened during the past few years and it is gratifying to newspaper men to have the commendation of such a high authority for their part in bringing about this important result.

STATE BEING RID OF BOVINE TUBERCULOSIS

Auburn, Ala., June 12—Progress now being made in freeing Alabama livestock from tuberculosis indicates that the livestock industry of the State should continue to develop and increase in returns, said Dr. C. A. Cary, dean of the college of veterinary medicine of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, and State veterinarian under the State Board of Agriculture at Montgomery.

Dean Cary announced that eradication work began in Montgomery County three months ago. That county is now three-fourths free and the job will be finished by early July.

Work was started the middle of April in Jefferson County and that county will be free by August, he said. On June 2, Dallas County began eradication, but no date was named for completing the job. Work will be started in other counties as rapidly as feasible and as funds are available.

Eradication is being done jointly under state laws by the State Board of Agriculture, the Federal Government, and the counties participating. Dr. R. E. Jackson of Birmingham is in charge for the Federal government.

Dairy cattle, beef cattle, and other livestock are being tested by a staff of workers, usually five to a county, Dr. Cary explained. When the job is finished each county will be free from tuberculosis which is a master handicap to the livestock industry. Due to previous eradication work only a small number of reactors are being found. Hence it is easier for this official eradication to complete the job, he declared.

"With Alabama now free from cattle ticks and on the way to the complete eradication of tuberculosis the prospect for the livestock industry is bright," Dr. Cary said.

In the divorce case of T. H. Hallard of London against his wife letters presented in evidence were of such a nature that the lawyers refused to let their stenographers copy them.

George Reid of Glasgow was sent to jail for thirty days for shouting down the minister at the first church service he had attended in twenty years.

"A newspaper's greatest asset is the confidence of its readers. If it is not able to obtain that confidence, it is of little value as a public force, and not of much value either to the advertiser in its columns.

"The newspaper which acquires and retains the good will of thousands of intelligent readers may be said to be representative of the highest type of journalism. Intelligent readers are able to distinguish between fair, accurate news and inaccurate reports, and the confidence of such readers is the greatest measure of good will a newspaper can possess. It is a high endeavor for a newspaper to seek to serve such readers and constantly to merit their approval.

"Many speak of the sins of the press. I do not defend all newspapers, nor do I sympathize with some of the trends in journalism today. The intelligent reader, however, does not lack opportunity to read good, honest newspapers for worth while news, and information of educational value.

E. E. Loomis, President of the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company, says:

That few persons seem to appreciate the struggle the railroads must continuously wage to maintain their service at its present high standard.

There is a constant demand for faster and more exacting service, necessitating enormous expenditures for special equipment and additional mechanical safety devices, etc.

The railroads, at the demand of regulatory authorities, must spend many millions of dollars annually for the elimination of grade crossings. Railway taxes have increased over 300 per cent since 1911 and now amount to more than $1,100,000 per day.

At the same time, the Government is spending vast sums of public tax funds on inland waterways which tend to divert freight business from the railroads in face of the fact that their most urgent need is additional traffic.

Railway rates are regulated by the Interstate Commerce Commission but their competitors on the highways, airways and waterways are not so regulated.

The question is--how long can the railroads continue to provide efficient transportation under these conditions.

The Mazaroff Mystery

THE STORY

Mervyn Holt is engaged by a man calling himself Mazaroff as a traveling companion. After a short tour they put up at the Woodcock Inn on Marradale Moor. They meet, casually, Mrs. Elphinstone and Sheila Merchison.

CHAPTER I—Continued

"Holt, liddle," he said, with a confidential nod, "you'll understand me, I'm sure—I want to have this day to myself, looking round old spots, you know, alone. And also, there's a man I want to see on a bit of business. He—you'll amuse yourself till evening, when I'll be back in good time for dinner?"

"Of course!" I agreed. "I'll be all right. Don't bother about me."

He thanked me, almost as if I had been the first person to consider. Presently, carrying a stout stick, he went out—and I noticed that just before leaving our sitting room he put on a pair of blue spectacles, with some remark about the glare of the sun. He went off in the direction of the village, and I saw no more of him until he turned up again just as dinner was ready at seven o'clock. He was very quiet and thoughtful during dinner, and it was not until he was half way through his after-dinner cigar that he suddenly motioned me to draw my chair close alongside his own.

"Holt," he said, "I've something to tell you. And, man!—it's the strangest tale you ever heard in your life!" I suppose I gave him a wondering, and perhaps a half-uneasy stare, for he nodded reassuringly as he drew his chair still closer to mine.

"Nothing to be frightened about, Holt, my lad," he said. "Just a—well, as you might put it. But—a tale as strange as any you ever heard. Anyway, one of 'em."

"Yes?" I said. "About—yourself?"

"Self and other folk," he replied, with a grim smile. "Other folk—aye, there's the devil of it! If it were only myself, now—but there's more than one affected."

He turned to the window and for a moment or two sat staring fixedly and in silence across the moor, stretching away in the rapidly gathering twilight. I noticed that the better of me, and I broke in on his thoughts.

"I'm all in the dark, Mr. Mazaroff," I said. "Am I to listen?" He started—then gave an emphatic nod.

"Aye!" he answered. "You're to listen, Holt, for I've nobody else to tell it to, and I'm wanting counsel on it, and you're a sensible youngster. It's just this—you saw the two ladies that passed us by yesterday afternoon when we were talking to the landlady at his garden gate?"

I nodded an affirmative. "Aye, well!" he continued. "They don't know it, and nobody knows it, only me. But it's just this, Holt, my lad—that's my wife and daughter!"

I was smoking one of Mr. Mazaroff's prime cigars at the moment, and when he said this I started so violently that it jumped from between my teeth and fell to the floor. It seemed to me that a whole age—an eon, if you like—elapsed in the mere act of stooping and recovering it. And I wondered at the calmness and banality of my reply when I sat upright again, looking at him.

"Muggrave," I said, quite steadily. "Muggrave called the elder lady Mrs. Elphinstone and the younger Miss Merchison—Miss Sheila Merchison."

"Muggrave here, Muggrave there!" he retorted. "He knows no better and no more. But I'm telling you that that's my wife, liddle, and the lassie's my daughter, and unless I see some way out of the complications there's the devil and all to pay!"

There was a pause between us then. He sat twiddling his big thumbs, and as he had discarded the blue spectacles a slight cast in his eyes looked, somehow, sinister. I began to sense the mysterious in him, and to realize that his was, to me, an unexplored personality.

"I don't understand," I said at last. "I'm going to make you understand, Holt," he answered. "This is the way of it—you go—good-looking lassie's name—Merchison, sure enough. And—Elphinstone though she may call herself, and no doat think she's a right to call herself—so is her mother's (and—so's mine). Merchison!"

"Not Mazaroff, then?" I exclaimed. "T'was a right to that, too," he said. "Legal right—all correct and proper. It's been my legal name for many years, and I'll remain so. But I was born Merchison—and not so far from here, too—and I was married Merchison. And you're Mrs. Merchison, for all she's married to Elphinstone."

"And I do understand any more now!" I said.

"Well, Holt," he answered, "I'll make it as plain as I can, and maybe it's not such a tangled tale as it seems when you get hold of one end of the thread and pull steadily at it. My father and mother died when I was a mere youngster, and after that I lived with my grandfather on his farm near Selkirk, across the border yonder. Then he died, when I was just about two-and-twenty, and he left me all he had, a tidy lot of money, and that, put to what my parents had left me, made me a pretty rich man. And I was headstrong and impetuous, and always for having my own way, and there was nobody to keep me from having it, nor from indulging myself in any whims that came into my head. And I came across a high-mettled girl that was pretty much like myself in that respect and we got wed in more than the usual haste, and began to repent as soon as we'd done it!"

"Why?" I asked.

"Man!" he answered. "We hadn't a taste in common! We'd nothing in common except obstinacy and self-will! And we found we were the worst pair to pull together that ever was harnessed. I saw in less than a year that things would never do—so I just took matters into my own hands. It wasn't the way I'd take now, with a sober mind and more knowledge of the world. But what I did was this—I went to a lawyer and pledged him to secrecy. Then I realized all that I had—a nice lot!—and divided it into two equal shares, and made one fast to her for life—she'll have had it always; never less, Holt, than fifteen hundred pounds a year of her own. And that done, and all secure for her, I just took my share and cleared out!"

"So—you ran away from her?" I suggested.

"If you put it that way, I did," he asserted candidly. "It was the only thing to do. There'd have been unpleasantness, otherwise. A silent and quiet departure—the only thing for it, in my judgment."

"And—the child?—the girl we saw yesterday afternoon?" I asked, after a pause. "Was she born then?"

"No!" he answered with emphasis. "She wasn't! If she had been, maybe I'd never have gone—indeed, I'm sure now I wouldn't have gone. But she was neither born, nor did I know she was likely to be born. She came eight months after I'd left."

"You heard of it, then?" I suggested. "Never knew of it till today!" he exclaimed.

"Of course, Mrs. Elphinstone—as she's known here—believes you to be dead!" I said. "That goes without saying."

"Oh, to be sure!" he answered. "She married this Elphinstone a few years back, just before he bought this Marradale Tower estate. Aye, she believes me dead as Adam—and here I'm alive!"

"What are you going to do?" I asked. "What would you do, yourself, Holt?" he replied, anxiously. "Tell me your plain opinion, man—I'll not be offended at anything you say."

"I think I should just go away, saying nothing," said I. "After all, you left her. And—if you reveal yourself, it'll mean breaking up what's probably a satisfactory settlement. Mr. Elphinstone and the—"

"She's never known you, Mr. Mazaroff," I remarked.

His bronzed cheeks reddened at that, and he shook his head.

"You're right, Holt, you're right!" he said, almost humbly. "And it's my own fault. Well—up to now, nothing's happened. Nobody knows but yourself."

"After all these years it would be something of a startling revelation," I observed. "It needs some reflection. And—then a new idea struck me, and I regarded him doubtfully. 'I suppose, if it came to it, you'd have to prove that—'"

"That Salim Mazaroff is Andrew Merchison," he interrupted. "Oh, that can be done. There's the cast in my eye, and a birthmark on my right arm, and there's papers and people—not just at hand, to be sure, but findable—that can substantiate all that."

"How came you to take such an unusual name?" I ventured to ask him.

He laughed softly, as if the reminiscence pleased him.

"I'll tell you," he answered. "When I first went off, it was to India. I knocked about there a good deal, and in the Persian gulf, and in adjacent parts. Then I went further south—to Durban and thence into the interior—the diamond districts. And in Durban I foregathered with an old man of like tastes to mine—in fact, he and I lived together and traded together. His name was Mazaroff, and he left me all his money—no little—on condition I took it. So I did—why not? At that time I'd no intention of ever coming back to England again. And now—there's the situation!"

"What are you going to do about it?" I asked.

"I don't know," he answered frankly. "Nothing in a hurry. And as I say, nobody knows but you and me. There's no fear of my being recognized. I've talked to a dozen people today who knew me in the old days, and in my blue spectacles they hadn't the least idea as to who I really was."

He got up then, and went out, to stroll about the front of the inn, alone. That night he said no more on the subject of his revelations, nor did he mention the matter in the morning. We spent most of that day in motor-ing to some ruins twenty miles away; when we returned in the evening there was a good deal of business being done at the inn—men were returning in numbers from a fair. After dinner, Mr. Mazaroff, remarking to me that he wanted to have a good think all by himself, crossed over to the open moor and strolled away across the heather. I never saw him again—alive.

I went out myself soon afterward, and was out until past nine o'clock, when I returned to the inn. He had not come back. Nor had he come at ten—and when eleven struck from the old grandfather clock in the stone-walled hall I sought out Muggrave and his wife, seated at their supper table after the tolls of an unusually busy evening.

The landlady and landlady were not inclined to any uneasiness or alarm. During our forty-eight hours' stay they had discovered that Mr. Mazaroff was, as they put it, an affable and friendly gentleman, inclined to sociability—their present opinion was that he had dropped in at one of the moorland houses, and was still there, comfortably chatting. But when twelve o'clock sounded, and he was still absent, Muggrave's face lengthened, and he began to talk about the foolishness of going out in the dusk and dark in strange places. "There's places he could fall over in the dusk, and there's others—bog-land—that he could sink into before he knew where he was, dark or light. Them that doesn't know these moors shouldn't wander about 'em, after dark."

"How Came You to Take Such an Unusual Name?" I ventured to ask him.

Muggrave got lanterns for Webster, me and myself; we went out on the moor and dispersed in different directions, listening always for any cry of distress.

We were out in that way until a faint gray light began to show beyond the eastern hills; at that we went back to the inn. None of us had heard or seen anything.

Webster and I got some food and hot coffee, and went out again—he one way, I the other. Mine took me toward the dawn. And suddenly I came face to face with the girl of evidence provided by the ruins. The town was known to tribes on the coast for many years, but it was shunned by them because they regarded it as being haunted by the spirits of the dead, who wreak special vengeance on intruders. The lighting of a fire in the precincts of the ruins was considered particularly dangerous by the negroes, even if the fire was only a cigarette.

Ruins of Ancient City Long Hidden in Jungle

After being hidden for centuries in a tangled-up mass of jungle, the ancient city of Gedi, has come to light only 50 miles from modern Mombasa. Professor Fleure, of the University College of Wales, who has been visiting Kenya colony with the members of the British association, believes that Gedi, known in Kenya as the "buried city," is of Persian origin and at least six hundred years old. The ruins disclose a fine Arabic writing, especially in the mosques and tombs. Professor Fleure thinks that Gedi would well repay investigations by archeological and ethnological experts. He does not believe these would be difficult in view of the profusion of Book characters are our brothers, because often they are more ourselves than we can ever be. whom I had been thinking for two days—Sheila.

CHAPTER II

Youth's Freemasonry

Sheila was sitting by one of the red-fringed pools that lay amongst the heather and the moss. Unconscious of any presence save that of a solemn-eyed spaniel who sat at her side, she had drawn off her shoes and stockings and was dabbling her feet and ankles in the dark waters.

The spaniel caught sight of me and barked. His mistress looked hastily in my direction, saw me, seemed to realize that she had seen me before, and though she blushed at being caught in a somewhat mystifying situation, accepted it calmly. She gave me a friendly nod—and at the same time began to put on her footgear. I purposely remained in the rear until she jumped to her feet, faced me, and laughed, pointing to the pool.

"There's a superstition about that well," she said, without preface or hesitation. "They say that if you dip your feet in it six times, within an hour of sunrise, any time between Michaelmas and Martinmas, you'll live happy ever after. So—I was trying it."

"I hope it's come true," I said. "As for myself, I'm not at all happy just now."

A look of concern came into her eyes.

"Not?" she responded. "Why?"

"I believe you saw me, yesterday—no, the day before—near the Woodcock, with an elderly gentleman?" I said. "You went by. Well, he's missing—lost! He went out from the inn, last night, after dinner, alone, and he's never returned. You know these parts? Are there places—"

"There are many dangerous places," she interrupted hastily. "Have you searched?"

"Several of us, all night," I answered. "We've seen nothing, heard nothing of him."

"Your father?" she asked, eyeing me half sympathetically.

"No—a friend, with whom I'm traveling," I replied. "I'm awfully anxious about him. It was unusually dark last evening, and I'm afraid he's come to harm—fallen over something or into something." I then told her Mr. Mazaroff's name and my own.

"I wonder if our people—gamekeepers, you know—have heard anything? If you'd walk with me to the house—"

She pointed across the moor to where the gables and chimneys of Marradale tower showed above the trees.

"We might hear something there," she continued. "We can go there in a few minutes."

We came before long to Marradale tower. In the courtyard, talking to a man in velvet, we met Mr. Elphinstone, a tall, thin, gray-haired studious looking man, who glanced at me wonderingly over the top of an unusually large pair of spectacles. His stepdaughter led me up to him.

"This is Mr. Holt—Mr. Mervyn Holt," she said. "He's a friend of his, Mr. Mazaroff, an elderly gentleman, have motored from London, and are staying a few days at the Woodcock. Last night Mr. Mazaroff went out alone on the moors, and he's never returned. Mr. Holt wants to find him; he's anxious."

Mr. Elphinstone, who looked to me to be one of those men who take in things very leisurely, nodded, and glanced at the man in velvet, and then said, "Oh! Parker—go and inquire amongst the men in the stables and in the gardens. Um! Lost all night, eh? Dear me! Er—won't you come in, Mr.—er—"

"My name is Holt, sir," I said, prompting his absent-mindedness.

"Holt, eh?" he answered, with a sudden gleam of interest. "Um! I was at Merton with a man of that name. He and I were great rowing men. He's vicar of some country parish in Buckinghamshire now, I believe—long since we foregathered."

"I think you are speaking of my father, Mr. Elphinstone," I remarked. "He was at Merton, and he's now vicar of Chellingtonham, near Aylesbury."

He turned and gave me his hand, shaking mine in evident high delight.

"Bless me!" he exclaimed. "Now just imagine it! This is a great pleasure. Come in—come in!—this is excellent!"

COLLEGES GAINING IN POWER

Dr. A. G. RUTHVEN, President University of Michigan.

ONE of the popular indoor sports in America is the criticism of our school system. Most of the disparaging criticism is based on inadequate information, is not at all constructive, and altogether misses the point.

One kind of attack especially irritates us, when a state university is accused of delving into politics. This is due to a confusion of terms, for politics in this sense is usually taken to mean the manipulation of government for the gain of institutions. Universities should not concern themselves with the appointment of regents or with any candidacy for office. This includes the faculty, administrative board and the alumni. Our task at the state university is to work with the government which the people give us. It is my business to work with the regents.

But when politics is defined as the science and practice of government, with this meaning the university will always be in politics. It must perform the functions for which it was brought into being, and find new ways of being useful. The primary function of any school is the instruction of our youth, yet a school must not only diffuse, but also increase knowledge.

The service a state university should offer is freely at the disposal of the state. This free offering of service is not confined to the teaching of the youth of the land, but should make the state university important in the life of the state as a department of the government.

DEATH PENALTY MUST STAND

By JUDGE M. A. KAVANAGH, Cook County (Ill.) Superior Court.

The first duty of a state is to protect the lives of its citizens just as the first duty of a nation is to protect its own life. An individual may take a life under the law if his own is in danger. Nations have taken lives throughout history to save their own. Why should not the state take lives to protect those it governs?

Capital punishment is a terrible thing but it is a deterrent.

Organizations that object to capital punishment compare states that have it and those that do not, but they compare these states unfairly. They do not compare Kansas, which has not this form of punishment, with Nebraska, which has. There are only half as many homicides in Nebraska as in Kansas. New Hampshire and Vermont have capital punishment and Maine does not. Yet there are twice as many homicides in Maine as in either of the other two.

The average criminal receives better treatment in prison than he does when he is free. He has a doctor to treat his ills, concerts, motion pictures and radios. The only thing he lacks is the chance to practice his vices, under our system of punishment.

The administration of criminal law calls for certain, speedy and appropriate punishment.

WRONG IDEA ABOUT SCIENCE

By REV. DR. HARRY EMERSON FOSDICK, New York (Baptist).

The mystery of life increases with each of man's conquests in science. The popular idea that science clears up mysteries so that the more science we have the less mystery is left is a strange inversion of fact. Whenever the mystery of the universe has at all been cleared up, the truth has proved more marvelous than men ever dreamed. The unknown world has always turned out to be full, not of ghosts and hobgoblins, but of marvels.

We cannot think that the spiritual experience of man is a solitary exception. This universe is more spiritually significant than we have ever dared dream. To be sure, our thoughts of God are inadequate, but the reason is that the truth lies beyond our imagination. In the meanwhile, for all the mystery that surrounds us, we have light enough to live by, to live decently with our neighbors, in a kindly way with our neighbors, and courageously in our troubles.

We have light enough to be at least a little radiant within, and with it, to help build here a more decent social order for personality to flourish in. Let us quit lamenting the mystery; there is sufficient light to walk by.

WRONG JUDICIAL PROCEDURE

By GEORGE W. WICKERSHAM, Chairman Law Enforcement Commission.

I am one of those who believe that our entire method of dealing with offenders is fundamentally wrong, and that the present day practice of endeavoring to prevent crime by augmented penalties is based upon fallacy which has time and again been demonstrated.

I would not have the construction of new, fairly decent and adequate prisons wait upon the reformation of the penal laws, and other holocausts such as that of Columbus be added to the many manifestations of improper conditions which have been occurring in many parts of the country while men dispute in legislatures and public meetings, and in the press the most sound and sane methods of dealing with crime.

The American Law Institute's proposed model code of criminal procedure provides for a real advance and the removal of many abuses, and represents a distinct contribution to the improvement of law enforcement.

Much of the blame for the unsatisfactory conditions of our law and judicial procedure justly is visited upon the bar . . . which as an organized entity in the United States today is a somewhat mythical quantity.

ADVANTAGE OF NEWSPAPER "AD"

By KENNETH COLLINS, Publicity Director.

Direct mail advertising is not only more expensive than newspaper advertising but the newspaper advertisement comes to the reader alongside the columns of news which he has paid for and which he wants to read.

The reader is in a reading mood. He didn't buy the newspaper to throw it in the wastebasket. I am of the impression that there is infinitely greater chance for him to read the advertisement than the advertisement that has been forced upon him through the mail.

Aid to Motorists During Night

A new device to assist motorists at night has just been placed on the London market. It is a reflector fixed to an elastic band which may be worn on the hand, enabling a driver to indicate his movements to any car following behind, as the brilliant red glow can easily be seen.

Joe Martina's Little Trick
Tried on Swatter Babe Ruth

When Tom Zachary was with the Washington team he used a trick of standing in front of the rubber and pitching from a distance several feet closer to the batter than the regulation distance. The batters had to watch Zachary closely to keep him from stepping on their toes as he wound up.

Oyster Joe Martina, who spent a season with the Nationals, thought Zachary's trick an excellent one to be used in case of emergency. He reserved his first use of it for the emergency of holding a one-run lead with two on and the invincible Babe Ruth at bat.

Bucky Harris, who was managing the team, ran over to the box to caution Martina to be very careful. Joe waived Bucky back, saying, "Don't worry, boy, I'll stop this guy. I'm gonna walk up a few feet and bust one past his whiskers so fast he'll think I'm throwing express trains at him. Just keep your weather-beaten eye on me."

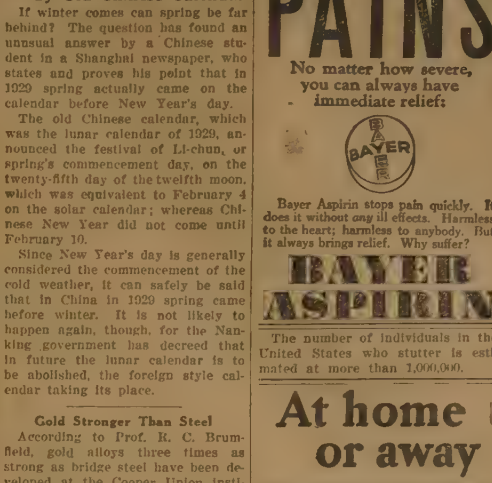

"I walked up, all right," said Martina in telling the story afterwards. "I moved five feet in front of the box, wound up and blazed away. Ruth swung and I ducked. When I got up the ball was dropping in the center field bleachers for the longest hit I ever saw in my life and the old ball game was gone."

Big Star at Lacrosse

Bobby Pool, third attackman of the St. John's college lacrosse team, who is called the greatest player in the United States. Although of midget size Pool shoots from either his left or right and can drive a ball through a knothole, so great is his accuracy. Pool's team won the national lacrosse championship last year.

Odd Situation Caused by Old Chinese Calendar

If winter comes can spring be far behind? The question has found an unusual answer by a Chinese student in a Shanghai newspaper, who states and proves his point that in 1929 spring actually came on the calendar before New Year's day.

The old Chinese calendar, which was the lunar calendar of 1929, announced the festival of Li-chun, or spring's commencement day, on the twenty-fifth day of the twelfth moon, which was equivalent to February 4 on the solar calendar; whereas Chinese New Year did not come until February 10.

Since New Year's day is generally considered the commencement of the cold weather, it can safely be said that in China in 1929 spring came before winter. It is not likely to happen again, though, for the Nanking government has decreed that in future the lunar calendar is to be abolished, the foreign style calendar taking its place.

Gold Stronger Than Steel

According to Prof. R. C. Brumfield, gold alloys three times as strong as bridge steel have been developed at the Cooper Union Institute in New York. The announcement follows the results of three years of research in the field of dental gold, and Doctor Brumfield has developed nearly sixty new gold alloys. It is a known fact that the alloys used in the filling of teeth have to be extremely hard when they solidify. The constant wear and tear destroys present-day alloys, so there is always a need for the superior types.—Science and Invention.

Land for Forest Crops

In western Oregon and Washington there are 10,000,000 acres, in both public and private holdings, which are permanently best suited for forest crops. In the whole of both states, says the American Tree association, there are probably 25,000,000 acres suitable. It is estimated that 35,000,000 acres in the inland empire, including Idaho and western Montana, or about 25 per cent of the area, is better adapted to forest growth than for any other purpose.

War on Bald Eagles

During the past ten years 35,000 bald eagles have been killed in the Northwest. Spurred on by the bounty offered by the government, one dollar per pair of talons, Indians, fishermen, hunters and boys have combined to carry out the war against the birds. Not only do they prey on salmon, small animals and wild birds, but very young blue fox pups are carried off by them.

Scotch Women Curling

Curling, long considered a man's game, has become a feminine pastime in Scotland. Some women have become experts at the game, and many new curling clubs for them were formed during the winter. The famous Scottish organization, the Kinross Curling club, is the latest to form a women's section, which is already flourishing.

Road Markers Protected by Law in Different States

Eighteen states now have laws making it a misdemeanor to willfully damage official road signs and with traffic steadily increasing there is a tendency to impose severe punishment on those who interfere with these utilities of travel, according to the research department of the American Automobile association.

The national motoring body pointed out that official road signs include all those erected by the state or local governments or by A. A. A. motor clubs with approval of the interested authorities.

The A. A. A. appeals to affiliated clubs, in states where such protective legislation has not been enacted, to conduct a vigorous campaign.

States in which it is now a misdemeanor to willfully damage, destroy, mutilate, tear down or deface any official road sign, warning or directional marker on highways are: Alabama, Arkansas, California, Delaware, Idaho, Louisiana, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, Pennsylvania, South Dakota and Virginia.

Will Weigh Trucks

Determined to enforce the law that denies overloaded trucks the use of certain highways, the Michigan highway department will install pit scales along principal trunk roads. State police will halt and weigh trucks suspected of carrying loads in excess of what the pavement will stand. The driver of an overloaded truck will be compelled to unload part of his cargo on the spot. He also may get a ticket.

The Boston Red Sox secured the star of the season when they signed Tom Oliver, outfielder. He has shown wonderful hitting and fielding ability in all of his games thus far.

Many Racing Events Are Wrongly Labeled Derby

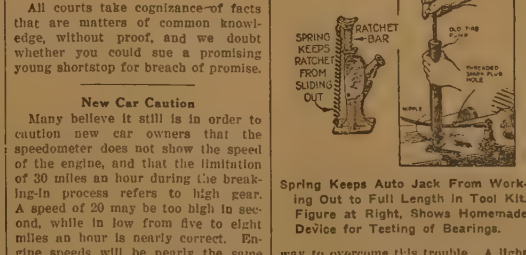

A glance at the conditions governing most of the events that are labeled "Derbies" proves that they deserve the title less than some events which are not so called.

For example: The Tia Juana, the Louisiana, the Kentucky, the Fairmount, the American and several smaller "Derbies" are not rightly called by this name because they do not fulfill the distance condition of the true derby, which is at one and one-half miles. Most of them do not conform to derby weight conditions, which call for 125 pounds for colts and 121 for fillies.

The only two major three-year-old feature races run under approximate derby conditions are the Belmont Stakes (sometimes referred to as the "Belmont derby") and the Latonia derby.

Gallant Fox May Equal Zev's Record

Gallant Fox With Sande Up.

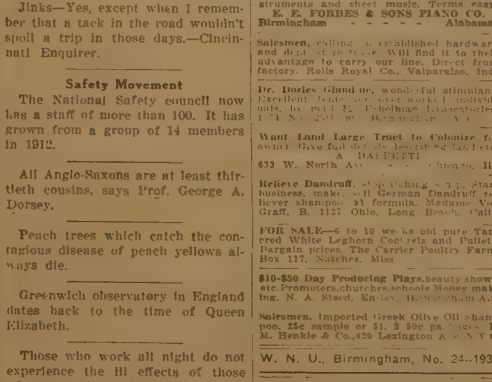

By his successive victories in the Woods, Frankness and Kentucky derbies. In all of which he came from behind when called upon to win, drawing away easily, Gallant Fox has won approximately $138,000, and there does not seem any sound reason to suppose that any of the horses that finished behind him in these three rich stakes can beat him in any of the races to come, unless the son of Sir Galahad III should state off suddenly.

The real chance for an upset in the three-year-old division is for some of last year's crack juveniles that have not been seen under colors so far can be got ready in time to whip Gallant Fox. Such a list includes the Whitney pair, Whitehorse and Boojum, Curuso, Hi-Jack and one or two others.

Should none of these disappointments of 1930 get into condition and none arrive on the scene to challenge the supremacy of Gallant Fox in the three-year-old division, it is by no means impossible that the Woodward colt can reach or come close to the all-time purse and stake winning record of Zev, which stands at $313,000.

was stated, and a part of the furnishings in the second story, while practically everything in the confectionery was saved.

The volunteer fire fighters of Clanton responded to a call from Thorsby, and arrived there in time to give considerable aid in preventing the burning of homes and business houses near the burning hotel. Due to the fact that there were no water connections available for the firemen of Clanton to connect the hose to, they put their efforts on the buildings near the hotel, and assisted Thorsby citizens in every way possible in keeping the blaze confined to one place.

The Thorsby Hotel and Mabel's Confectionery were owned by R. D. Gibbons, who also operated the hotel, and who is an employee of the L & N Railroad. Some insurance was carried it was stated. The hotel has long been a landmark in Thorsby, having been built back in the days when automobiles were few. Friday afternoon, June 6th, Mr. Stapp met with a group of farmers at Cooper, in interest of placing one or more bulls in that section of the county. Among those present and interested were T. E. Patterson, Charlie Patterson, Tom Allen, W. W. Calloway, Ellis Mims, Tandy McSwain, Archie Taylor, H. G. Taylor, Lawton McDowell, W. C. Moore, L. T. Grant, O. L. Devaughn, and others.

At this meeting Mr. Lawton McDowell, near Cordry Mill Place, agreed to take one of the bulls and Mr. Archie Taylor, west of Cooper, agreed to take another bull.

A group of interested farmers met at Collins Chapel Monday night, June 9, and a committee composed of Wilbur Bean, Perry Gore, and Reuben Jackson, were asked to see if they could get some individual in the community to purchase the bull.

The bull association plan calls for bulls out of cows that have made high production records. With the arrangement Mr. Stapp is trying to put into effect, these high priced bulls can be used ten or twelve years, as the bulls can be switched to different communities every two years. This will assure the farmers of these communities in which the bulls are placed, the service of good bulls over a long period of years.

The present owners of the bulls eligible for the association are:

Howard Oden, Isabella community; R. M. Foshee, Mt. Pleasant community; E. P. Mims, Temple Church community; W. H. Rasco, Pleasant Grove community, west of Jemison; Lawton McDowell and Archie Taylor.

The second alarm was for the same location of the fire, as the blaze had started up again, and it is said that the second blaze did more damage than the first, however, firemen went about the work to a finish.

The News was not able to learn the estimate of the damage done. It was also stated that Mr. and Mrs. Higgins were not at home at the time, having gone to a fishing camp that afternoon.

Seeing Big League BASEBALL

By BILLY EVANS
Sports writer, Big League Umpire and General Manager of the Cleveland Indians

In the old days of umpiring, there was but one man in charge of a game. Now we always have two, sometimes three and in a world series game, four.

Back in 1903, working a series in New York between the Washington and the Yankees, then nicknamed the Highlanders, I saw Walter Johnson pitch three remarkable games in succession. In those days one umpire was in charge.

Little more than a rookie, really his first year in the majors, this being in 1903 (Johnson had joined Washington late in the fall of 1902), he shut the New York club out in three straight games.

The first game was played on Friday, September 4, 1903, Washington winning 3-0, Johnson allowing only six hits. The second game was played Saturday, September 5, Washington this time winning 6-0, only four hits were made off Johnson's delivery. In those days Sunday ball was not legalized in New York and Walter had a day of rest. Monday was Labor day, two games being scheduled for the afternoon. Joe Cantillon, then managing Washington, announced in the papers if Johnson shut New York out in the third game he would send him right back for the fourth consecutive start.

New York used the great Jack Chesbro, famous spitball pitcher, in an effort to break the shut-out epidemic. Johnson proceeded to turn in the best game of the three, again blanking New York, this time 4-0, allowing two measly hits.

In the late innings of the third game Johnson was hit on the right arm by one of Chesbro's fast-breaking spitballs. The game had to be delayed about five minutes before Walter was able to resume play. He finished the game under difficulties.

During the intermission the arm became so stiff and badly swollen that it was impossible to use him in the fourth game as Cantillon had advertised he would.

For remarkable consistent pitching I rate these three games by Johnson as the greatest bit of hurling of all time. Three shut-outs in three consecutive games allowing six, four and two hits in each affair, there being an improvement, rather than a deterioration in each game, is, to my way of thinking, a most remarkable pitching effort—one that should stand for all time.

About the time Walter Johnson was breaking in the majors, Ed Walsh was at the height of his career. Walsh will go down in the records as a super-pitcher, if ever there was one. He pitched his arm and heart out long before he should have been through. He gave about sixteen years of pitching in about eight seasons.

Old-time fans, and they need not be so old at that, will readily recall the great work Walsh did for the Chicago White Sox back in 1908. He kept his team in the running from start to finish, only to see the championship lost in the final game of the season.

During that eventful season Walsh took part in 66 ball games, more than one-third the number played by his club, and only 12 less than half the games played by the Sox, Chicago taking part in 156 contests.

His best pitching performance that season was a 1-0 defeat in which he struck out 15 Cleveland batters in eight innings. He forced the late Eddie Joss to set a world's record to beat him, Chicago failing to get a run or hit, not a man reaching first base. It was a trick of fate that so wonderful a feat should bring only defeat. To my way of thinking, Ed Walsh was the greatest of all spitball pitchers. The records set by Walter Johnson and Ed Walsh, stand out pitchers of their day, will probably stand for years, if not for all time, for model bits of great hurling.

Minor Leagues Will Attempt to Slash the Salaries of Stars

Seeking to effect a violent and drastic slash in the salaries of Class AA baseball players, Harry Williams, president of the Pacific Coast league, will serve as a committee of one in a three-cornered huddle this summer with Thomas Hickey, head of the American association, and Charles Knapp, boss of the International league.

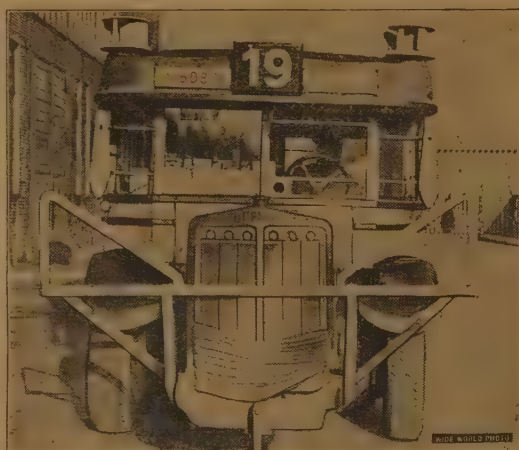

A date for the conference has not been set, but when Williams leaves for the meeting he expects to carry with him pleas of eight Coast league club owners.

Williams will present to his contemporaries, at the forthcoming session, figures which probably will be adopted by them as the "peaks" in salaries.

Like the major leagues, the Coast circuit wants to make various slashes, but wants first to make sure that the International and American association will follow suit.

BERLIN HAS NEW TYPE OF FENDER

The Berlin Traffic company is at present experimenting with this new type of fender which is here shown on a Berlin bus. The new fenders are expected to prove a great help and guide to drivers in enabling them to judge their distance in narrow lanes of cars and in driving in small quarters.

BILL, THE BUS DRIVER SAYS

"It's safe to wait till others pass. There ain't no doubt about it. Tell that rule to a drivin' fool; Don't whisper it, but shout it."

(By MARCUS A. DOW.)

A joint is a place where two streets join, intersect or cross and are mostly gumbalin' joints where reckless drivin' fools risk their lives.

A laundry delivery bus was bowlin' merrily along a street in Chicago about a year ago when I was there spendin' a vacation and heap plenty dough, and the driver had the right-of-way. That is, he thought he had the right-of-way (right-of-way stuff is mostly the bunk) at this particular joint with houses built right up to the sidewalk line on all four corners, but a five-ton coal truck on the side street quickly changed his right-of-way theory.

Shirts and nighties were scattered half a block in each direction and the laundry driver was taken to a hospital where they built plaster casts around his legs to hold them together. He suffered nothin' worse than a double splintered fracture of both legs that crippled him for keeps, and that's nothin' to give three rousin' cheers about.

When a railway engineer runs a locomotive in a yard where there are no block signals he has a rule. "Be prepared to stop within your range of vision." A simple rule and a good one for drivin' fools to learn. If the distance from a point just in front of your car to a buildin' on a corner is 14 feet, that's your range of vision. Then you should be prepared to stop in 14 feet.

Dependin' too much on the other guy and poor judgment as to what is a safe speed are often causes of collisions at joints. You think 20 m.p.h. is a safe speed, but then you are going 30 feet per second. Multiply your speedometer speed by one and a half and you get the number of feet you travel per second. See if you can stop in two seconds! And see how far you go before you stop. Also before a blif in the neck leaves your friends weepin' and sayin' "He was good guy, but so careless."

Slow down as you approach intersections because they're dangerous gumbalin' joints where human lives are lost on the turn of a set of wheels if luck goes against you.

AUTOMOBILE HINTS

When the steering suddenly becomes stiff try lubricating the king pin bushings and inflating the tires. It usually works.

A pawnshop lending money on automobiles, trucks and tractors has been established in Prague, Czechoslovakia.

Most automobile accidents are caused by drivers who have caused them before—just as most crimes are caused by those who have violated the law before.

Your tires will last longer if you switch the rear ones to the front and vice versa every few thousand miles. As the rear tires get most of the wear, this evens things up.

The president of a large automobile firm says a machine for each member of the family is the thing. This seems to exhaust all the immediate possibilities, and we guess the next thing will have to be a guest car.

Pennsylvania has had 400 sets of its 1930 automobile license plates made up bearing letters but no numerals to test their efficacy as compared with the all numeral or combination numeral and letter plates.

Man Might With Profit

Take Lesson From Dogs

If man took lessons from dogs, the world would be a better place, according to Frank Dole, sportsman and dog fancier, writing in Country Home.

"This," he says, "is not hero worship on my part, but I do believe that the sacrifices dogs make for men and the faith the dog places in his master are examples of the finest qualities, qualities which man might show in a greater degree to the benefit of everybody. But just as among millions of men there are comparatively few who could properly be described as heroes, so among the millions of dogs not a great many distinguish themselves above their fellows for heroism.

"It is true that a dog's devotion is seldom alienated by neglect, but to bring out the finest qualities in him he must be treated as a companion. Trust and companionship are the things that have produced the greatest of canine heroes."

Locomotive Obeys Orders

The scientific world was startled a short time ago by the invention of a toy dog which issued from its kennel and returned at the word of command. The actions of the canine automaton were controlled by the length of the sounds hurled at it, which influenced the passage of the electrical current to make the little animal hop in or out, following the desires of the operator. This same principle has been applied to the operation of a toy locomotive called "Casey Jones," after the hero of song and story by that name. "Go ahead, Casey," starts the engine on its way. The command, "Stop," issued in a sharp, quick manner, brings the engine to a stop at once. These orders are transmitted through the medium of a telephone transmitter.

Letter Long Undelivered

A letter that had laid crumbling in a mail chute for 42 years was recently recovered in a structure in St. Paul, Minn., which was about to be vacated. The Northern States Envelope company had occupied the premises for a half century, but were compelled to leave on account of the building having been condemned in order to widen the street. As the last of the effects were being taken out the letter was discovered. It had been mailed in February, 1893.

In Photography

An "ambrotype" is a picture taken on a plate of pressed glass, in which the lights are represented in silver and the shades are produced by a dark background visible through the unsilvered portions of the glass. The ambrotype was invented by James Ambrose Cuttin, and used during the transition period between daguerreotypes and photographs.

Mother of Four Babies

"Although I am only 22 years old, I have four babies to care for. Before my first baby was born my mother urged me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because I was so terribly weak. I had to lie down four or five times a day. After three bottles I could take a great improvement. I still take the Vegetable Compound whenever I need it for it gives me strength to be a good mother to my family."—Mrs. Vern L. Dennings, 510 Johnson Street, Saginaw, Michigan.

THE STORY

Mervyn Holt is engaged by a man calling himself Mazaroff as a traveling companion. After a short tour they put up at the Woodcock inn on Marrasdale moor. They meet, casually, Mrs. Elphinstone and Sheila Marchion. Mazaroff tells Holt they are his wife and daughter and that his real name is Mazaroff. That night Mazaroff fails to return to the inn and his disappearance is unexplained. Holt meets Sheila and tells her of Mazaroff's disappearance.

He pushed me before him into a room where Mrs. Elphinstone was evidently waiting breakfast for her husband and daughter. She did not see me at first, being concerned with tea-making, but she evidently recognized Mr. Elphinstone's step.

"Are you and Sheila never coming to breakfast, Malcolm?" she demanded. "The tea—" Then she turned and saw me, and I saw that she recognized me as the young man whom she had passed two days before. Mr. Elphinstone pushed me forward.

"Marion!" he exclaimed. "A truly most wonderful and fortunate thing! This young gentleman is the son of my old friend Tom Holt! Isn't it extraordinary that he should drop on me from the clouds like this? He came—let's see, how did he come?"

"—oh, I remember now, Sheila brought him to be sure."

"Yes," said Sheila, "and you've already forgotten why I brought him! Mother," she went on rapidly, "Mr. Holt is staying at the Woodcock with that old gentleman we saw him with the other day—they're motoring. And the old gentleman is lost, and Mr. Holt has been out all night searching for him."

Mrs. Elphinstone gave me a polite welcoming, if somewhat frigid handshake.

"Then I'm quite sure Mr. Holt will go with some breakfast," she said, in practical fashion. "Attend to him, Sheila."

"This is very kind of you," I said, "but I really ought to be looking for my missing friend."

Mr. Elphinstone sat down, helped himself to some fish, and after a few reflective sips at a cup of tea, leaned across the table toward his stepdaughter.

"How would it be to inquire at High Cap lodge?" he suggested. "Verner's people might have heard something, or know something."

"Good!" said Sheila. "I'll take Mr. Holt across there presently. That," she continued, turning to me, "is my cousin, Verner Courthorpe's place—High Cap lodge. We'll go to see him."

We each made a hurried breakfast and set out. Our way led toward the hills and became rugged and lonely.

"My cousin has a small shooting party at his lodge," announced Sheila, as we came in sight of our destination. "There's himself, and his manager (Courthorpe are bankers, you know, in the city), a man named Armistead, whom I loathe, and another man, a London doctor, Eccleshare, whom I detest. I suppose we shall find them at breakfast."

She was evidently well acquainted with High Cap lodge and its arrangements, for without any ceremony or delay she led me in by the front hall, down a passage, and thrust open the door of a room that looked out on a fine stretch of moor. Three men, lounging around a well-spread breakfast table, turned in astonishment at our entrance, examining me closely.

I, in my turn, took a good, close look at them, individually and collectively. For I remembered that when Mazaroff had intimated to me that he wanted to spend that first day at the Woodcock alone, he had also said that there was a man in the neighborhood whom he wanted to see on business. And for the moment it flashed upon me that as all these three men were from London, the man to whom he referred might be one of them: two, at any rate, were connected with banking and financial matters; so, also, as I knew well enough by that time, was Mazaroff.

But I got no help from my inevitably superficial examination of the three. One, obviously the host, was a youngish man of a somewhat heavy and sullen cast of countenance. The second was a sleek and sly-looking middle-aged man, with a carefully trimmed beard and a somewhat suspicious air—this I presently discovered to be Armistead, the bank manager. And the third was a great, fleshy man, a sort of man-mountain, clean-shaven, rugged of feature.

Sheila paid no more attention to the two guests than was represented by a curt nod: she went straight up to Courthorpe.

"Verner," she said, "this gentleman is Mr. Holt, whose father is an old friend of Mr. Elphinstone. Mr. Holt is staying for a day or two at the Woodcock, where he came with a friend, Mr. Mazaroff, in Mr. Mazaroff's car. Last night Mr. Mazaroff, who is an elderly man, went out on the moor, and he's never returned. Have you or your people heard or seen anything of him?"

I'll do Verner Courthorpe the justice to say that he showed some polite concern in the matter. Neither he nor his two guests could tell me anything, but Courthorpe went out with Sheila and myself to a shed at the rear of the lodge, where two gamekeepers and some other men were waiting, and of them he made inquiries. That resulted in nothing, but he promised that in the course of the day's shooting he and his party would keep their eyes and ears open as they went about the moors.

Sheila and I presently went away in the direction of Marrasdale tower. We had walked some little distance in silence when she suddenly turned on me with a look which showed me that she felt instinctively certain that I, out of sheer youthful sympathy, would understand what she was going to say.

"If a man's known by the company he keeps," she said, almost bitterly, "what about my cousin Verner? Did you ever see two more utterly detestable men than Armistead and Eccleshare? I loathe the sight of them! And yet my mother wants me to marry Verner Courthorpe; insists on it! Well—I just won't—won't!"

I was so much taken aback by this sudden outburst of intimate confidence that I lost my tongue, and could only stand looking at my companion. She reddened a little under my gaze, but her attitude became still more confidential and appealing.

"I daresay you think I'm an awful ass for saying things like that," she said hurriedly. "But—you're young, and there's nobody about here who is. You wouldn't like to be forced into doing what you don't want to do, would you?"

"From what I've seen of you," I said, "I should say that nobody could make you do what you don't want to do."

"I wish my own mother would see that," she responded quickly. "She's been trying to force Verner Courthorpe on me for the last twelve months! And I won't!"

"Why is Mrs. Elphinstone so keen about it?" I inquired.

"Oh, I don't know!" she said, half impatiently. "She and his mother—my aunt, you know—sort of settled it between them. Verner, now that his father's dead, is nominal head of the bank, and he's piles of money. And I'm afraid my mother is fond of anybody and anything that's mixed up with money."

"And Mr. Elphinstone?" I suggested.

"Mr. Elphinstone is about as useful to appeal to as one of the folios in his library," she answered.

"What are you going to do, then?" I asked.

She gave me an arch glance—and, for the first time, though I had looked at her closely enough before, I saw something that gave me a start. There was the slightest, the very slightest suspicion of a cast in her left eye, just as there was—but more defined and noticeable—in Mazaroff's.

"Do?" she said. "What, to checkmate my mother and Verner? Why—I'll marry somebody else!"

We exchanged very candid glances at that.

"Is—there anybody else?" I asked.

She looked at me from under her eyelashes.

"No!" she answered.

I don't know what I was going to say then. I have a vague notion that I was very near a blunt declaration that I had fallen in love with her at first sight. But at that moment we turned the corner of a plantation, and came across Mr. Elphinstone, who was mooning along with a sort of alpenstock in his hand, and obviously lost in the clouds or mists of his own reflections. He came to earth with a start on seeing us.

"Oh, ah, to be sure!" he exclaimed. "I believe I was coming to meet you. Holt—you must come and lunch with us."

I interrupted him, peremptorily: it was the only thing to do.

"It's awfully kind of you, sir," I said, "but I can't do anything until I've found or heard of Mr. Mazaroff."

"What'll you do, now?" inquired Sheila.

"Get hold of the police and have a thorough search of the district made," I answered. "And there's no time to be lost, so you'll excuse me if I hurry away."

I went off without more ado—I knew very well that I should see her again before the day was out and in other days to come.

I went on across the moor to the Woodcock. Webster was standing on the road before the open door.

"Heard anything?" I demanded as I got near him.

"Not a word, sir," he replied. "Nothing! There's two men waiting for

And Yet My Mother Wants Me to Marry Verner Courthorpe

you inside. Mr. Holt—want some information. One's a police sergeant; the other's a newspaper reporter."

"Then it's got out, Webster?" I said.

"That makes it all the stranger."

"Oh, it's all round the district by now, Mr. Holt," he answered. "Everybody knows he's missing. But I've neither seen nor heard anybody who saw him last night—it would seem as if he clean disappeared when he walked out of that door."

"There's no doubt of that, Webster," I said. Truth to tell, I was already wondering if Mazaroff had made a clean disappearance on purpose. By this time he might be in London, vanished for the second time in his life, and for practically the same cause. But that was all surmise: I turned to the inn.

"Well," I said, "come in, Webster, and let's hear what these fellows want."

The policeman introduced himself as Sergeant Manners of the county constabulary, stationed at Marrasdale; the reporter as Mr. Bonnas, district representative of the leading county newspaper and of one of the London press agencies. Manners was a big, military-looking man; Bonnas a little, ratty chap, content to scribble in his book while the sergeant did the questioning. That quickly turned to a point which, it was very plain to see, the police mind considered all important.

"This gentleman now, sir," asked the sergeant, when I had given him the main facts of the case, "he'd be a wealthy gentleman, no doubt?"

"You may take it that Mr. Mazaroff is a wealthy man," I answered.

"And in that case likely to have wealth on him when he walked out of this house, no doubt?" continued the sergeant. "Valuables, of course?"

Water Filtration Has Curbed Disease Spread

About 1897 it was announced by Percy Frankland and others that sand filtration removed nearly all the bacteria in water. Five years later came the outbreak of cholera in Hamburg, and a striking demonstration was afforded of protection through filtration. Hamburg and Altona, two cities on the Elbe river, both used the river as a source of water supply. Hamburg used unfiltered water; Altona filtered its supply. When cholera infection of the river water occurred, Altona escaped with only a few cases. Hamburg, on the other hand, had an enormous number.

Following the rapid advance of the science of bacteriology in the '80s and '90s, it was natural to consider the possibility of purifying drinking water by the addition of chemical disinfectants. The first systematic use of chlorine in water is credited to Hous-ton and McGovern in England in 1904 and 1905. The present world-wide use of chlorine disinfectant of public water supplies, however, is due largely to the work of George A. Johnson, who, in 1908, used bleaching powder ("chloride of lime") for the purification of Jersey City's water supply.—New York Times.

A Fair Cop

For years and years and years—no, let us start again: For weary hours the angler sat watching his float. It never moved, save when a ripple of the river made it tremble and raised false hopes in his heart. Then, with the snort of an enraged bull and the foot-tread to match, the village constable came to him.

"Fishing ain't allowed in this pond," he snapped. "Beat it!"

The fisherman turned bored eyes to him and jerked the hook out of the water.

"I'm not fishing," he replied, with weary sarcasm in his voice. "I'm teaching this worm to swim."

"A—ah!" snorted the policeman triumphantly. "Then come along with me. Bathing ain't allowed in the pond without costumes, and he ain't got one on!"

"He carried a lot of ready money," I said.

"Watch and chain, likely?" he asked, with a knowing look.

"An exceedingly valuable watch and chain—gold," I replied. "And, if you want to know, he had a very fine diamond in his necktie, and another in a ring on his left hand. He'd also a solid gold cigar case and a solid gold matchbox."

The sergeant gave me an emphatic nod.

"Then I'll tell you what it is!" he exclaimed. "And no mistake either! This is a case of murder and robbery! What!—here's a gentleman with all that on him walks out on a lonely moor in full view of all those drover chaps that was about here last night and comes from Lord knows where—why, of course, some of 'em followed him, and did him in for what they could get! Murder, sir—that's what it is, and followed by robbery—never heard of a clearer case!"

"If it is so," I asked, "how is it that his body hasn't been found?"

"Ah!" he answered, giving me a significant look. "You don't know these parts, sir. They're wilder now what you'd think. There's places here where you could drop a body, quiet like, and nobody'd ever find it. Bog holes. Lots of places. I should say that, if you meant to do it, you could hide the vestiges of a crime for ever on Marrasdale moor."

"What are you going to do?" I asked.

"Well," he replied reflectively, "it'll have to be reported to headquarters. There'll be a proper search made, and inquiries. Of course, in my opinion, it's as I say—some of 'em drovers has done him in and rifled his pockets. We must circulate the news far and wide—Mr. Bonnas here'll put pieces in the paper."

Mr. Bonnas waved his notebook.

"It'll be in every principal newspaper in England, London and provincial, tomorrow morning," he announced. "You haven't got a photo of the missing gentleman?"

"No!" I replied. "And I'm not at all sure that the missing gentleman will like so much publicity. If he turns up—"

The sergeant laughed.

"Turn up!" he exclaimed. "Lord bless you!—he'll never turn up, not if he went out with all that valuable property on him. Murder and robbery—that's what it is."

And with a final remark to the effect that this was a bad job, and he expected it to work out as he had predicted, the two went away.

What the local police did I don't know, but when darkness fell that night I was still without news of Mazaroff. Nor did we get any during the next day, and when the third night after his disappearance came, I began to feel certain that that disappearance was premeditated and intentional, and that he had just cleared out in order to avoid the revelations of which he had spoken to me.

It was just coming gray dawn on the third morning, and I was awake, wondering what to do, when a knock came at my door. I sprang out of bed, opened it, and found Mazaroff and Webster, half-dressed, in the passage. The landlord gave me a look.

"They've found him!" he whispered. "Leastwise, they've found—"

He seemed to choke at that, and I turned eagerly to the chauffeur. He, too, showed signs of unwillingness. But he got some words out.

"They've found a body, Mr. Holt," he said. "Some place on the moors—"

"Rever's den," interrupted Mazaroff.

"And brought it here," continued Webster. "It—the fact is, sir, the head's—the features, you know—gone! But the clothes, sir—they're his!"

I dressed hastily and went down with them to the outhouse wherein its finders, a local policeman and a game watcher, had laid the body. I am not going into details about it here—but, as somebody muttered, there were stots and wensels and similar carnivorous animals in hundreds on those moors. Still, those were Mazaroff's clothes, and there was the birthmark he had told me of.

The news had already spread, and Manners, the sergeant who had questioned me, came hurrying along. He examined the clothing. There was not as much as a penny piece left in the pockets; watch, chain, rings, pocketbook, papers, were all gone. He turned on me with a look that was as triumphant as it was significant.

"What did I tell you, captain?" he murmured. "Didn't I say murder and robbery? And wasn't I right? What could be plainer?"

I made no answer. I was thinking of other things. However he had come by his death, the fact remained that Mazaroff was dead. And there was I, as far as I knew, the only person in the world who knew his secret—a secret which meant that I should presently have to carry this strangest of stories to Marrasdale tower.

Later in the morning Eccleshare came to the Woodcock. He had heard of the discovery, he said, and had hurried over from High Cap lodge to offer his professional services. And just then up drove the local doctor, on the same errand. The two of them went to the room where the dead man had been laid out. They were there some time. At last Eccleshare came back, alone.

"Mr. Holt," he said, as the police sergeant and I approached him, "your friend has been shot."

He made this announcement with a curious gravity. But Manners and I both let out exclamations of astonishment.

SOCIETY AND THE CRIMINAL

By SANFORD BATES, U. S. Superintendent of Prisons.

THIS country has failed miserably in the handling of prisons. This failure is not a failure to keep prisoners confined, but one of not making inmates into tractable and law-abiding citizens. We have delegated to the poorest-equipped agency a task which the combined ingenuity of all the rest of society has yet found impossible of solution—the task of controlling criminal conduct.

Indirect responsibility for the prison riots and the Columbus (Ohio) catastrophe may be attributed to the crime commissions who called for more punishment, the legislatures that increased penalties, and to the judge- and parole boards who lost their sense of proportions in the matter of sentences.

The fight is now on between society and the criminals. The position taken in reference to the treatment of prisoners within the next few years will be of extreme importance to our future welfare.

Prisons of the future should be at once a disciplinary school for those who can be reformed, a place of permanent segregation for the incorrigible, and a laboratory for the study of the causes of crime.

Prison conditions at present are infinitely better than those of 50 years ago, but it has taken the bloody riots of recent history to bring about a general public movement toward better conditions. Punishment can be so devised, I believe, to be at once protective, corrective and deterrent.

PRESS HELPFUL IN CRISIS

By JULIUS H. BARNES, Chairman National Business Survey.

The press has played a very helpful part in relieving the hysteria that accompanies business depressions in the nation. Actual information, the common possession of all, could be trusted to translate itself into intelligent action, in preservation of the business fabric. Exaggerations and rumors must be stripped of their power to injure or to paralyze individual judgment.

Unemployment and the fear of unemployment must be lifted from the individual, in and out of business, so that the orderly habits of our people could sustain the everyday process of trade.

American journalism, safeguarded by national ideals of free speech and free press, has been a great force in guiding and crystallizing public opinion. In this country as nowhere else in the world, public opinion is the court of final resort, and the influence which translates itself, fast or slow, into laws and administrative acts.

Growing industry, increased workers' wages and higher living standards have created a new standard of intelligence and information in the public which American journalism touches. Increasing intelligence with the wide spread of education has created a people who should be trusted to understand something of these forces which translate themselves into human welfare.

DEFECTS IN AMERICAN HOMES

By V. T. THAYER, Director Ethical Culture School.

America is becoming a nation of adults. In 1790 there were 780 adults for each 1,000 children; whereas in 1900 there were 1,580. Today the proportion is about 2 to 1.

Children are in danger of becoming swamped in an atmosphere planned mainly for the convenience of adults. The home, former stronghold of the child, is breaking up and being replaced by the school.

People move oftener from house to house. Members of the family work and play more outside the family circle. There is a steady disintegration of family bonds and constructive family influences. Labor-saving devices and the necessary crowding of families into small living quarters combine to take out of the home the activities which formerly gave the child a first-hand knowledge of the ways human beings secure for themselves the basic essentials of food, clothing and shelter.

No matter how widely the tenement house and the luxurious apartment hotel may differ in the comforts of life, they are at one in their disregard for the needs of child life. The former drives the child into the streets, while the latter restricts his activities to an environment dominated by adults.

LAWYERS MUST "CLEAN HOUSE"

By JUSTICE ROYAL A. STONE, Minnesota Supreme Court.

There never has been a time when American law and the legal profession has been held in such scant respect as now.

On the ethical side, no profession, and possibly no business, is put on a lower plane in the lay mind than our own. Whether the rising tide of criticism and denunciation is a mere surge in a flow that has been going on for centuries and will soon subside or whether it is a portent of a real and impending danger may not be clear. But it is plain that as a profession we do not enjoy the degree of confidence of which we aspire to be worthy.

I would advocate a revision of courses in law schools to equip students with practical business knowledge and administration as well as theory of law. There should be better organizations of lawyers to stimulate their service in the public interest. They must abandon the idea that the law is a monopoly for their own benefit.

STANDARDS OF PRESS RISING

By PRESIDENT HOOVER.

The steadily rising standards of journalism are an encouragement to those who believe that the press should not only be one of the most powerful agencies in the life of the people, but also one rendering the highest possible service through dissemination of constructive thought in science, social advance and civic idealism.

The greatest challenge to the ingenuity of the journalist is to make these things as interesting to the public as are the more familiar subjects which apparently must be treated in terms of conflict. I am happy to believe that continual progress is being made in these directions by the press.

The Double Primary Has Its Faults

It seems that the question of whether we should have a single or double primary for the selection of candidates, for public office, is going to become an outstanding issue in the forthcoming Democratic primary. The issue is being raised by the several candidates who seek to be nominated for the office of Governor. Hon. Watt T. Brown, who is National Democratic Committeeman from Alabama, and who has had a number of years experience in the Legislature of Alabama, and who now holds the position of President Pro Tem of the State Senate, in his platform for Governor, is favoring the single primary and Judge J. A. Carnely, of Enterprise, Alabama, also favors the single primary. Judge B. M. Miller, and W. C. Davis, have declared for the double primary, and just as strongly for it as Brown and Carnely have declared against it. McCall, at first announcement of his campaign declared for the double primary and then is said to have switched to the idea of a single primary. Judge Finnell has taken the position that the present race is being run under a law that prescribes the single primary with second choice voting and that if the people desire the law changed they will have to do so in the selection of senators and representatives in the next legislature, who will have the authority to change the law. Senator Watt T. Brown, in his platform, in dealing on the question of 'Primary Law' has this to say:

"I am opposed to changing the single primary laws to that of the double. The abuses of the double primary was what brought about the change to the single, with its privilege of second choice vote. Such a change would practically eliminate all persons of moderate means from participating as candidates when they are forced into two primaries; besides, it would cost the candidates or tax payers approximately fifty thousand dollars to hold the second primary. A less number of voters would take part in the second primary, thereby making it a minority instead of a majority, as some claim. The single primary leaves the Democratic party in much better condition to meet the opposition in a general election. It is all wrong to have laws that will have a tendency to force candidates seeking office to expend more than the office pays. A double primary is only one step from the old convention system."

An example of what took place when we had the double primary system may not be out of place. In 1902, in the race for Attorney General of Alabama, four outstanding men were candidates. They were Cobb, Garber, Troy and Wilson, and in the first primary each received the following votes, viz:

Cobb	14,067
Garber	26,054
Troy	10,003
Wilson	29,618
Total	79,742

In the second primary, the two leading candidates of the first primary received the following votes:

Wilson	18,972
Garber	16,379
Total	35,351

Which shows that less than a majority of the votes cast in the first primary nominated the candidate in the second primary or run off.

Clanton As Host

The Prattville District Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, meets in our town Monday and Tuesday. It is expected that there will be a large number of out-of-town visitors here, as delegates to the conference on those two days.

Clanton has such an opportunity quite often, to make a good showing when the town is acting host to visitors, especially a large number at one time. As questions arise, there may be a question as to whether or not, the citizens of Clanton are taking advantage of these opportunities to get over a message of good will to the outside via strangers to the town.

Next Monday and Tuesday bring with them just such an opportunity. Clanton should be at its best. Each citizen, whether man, woman or child, regardless of religious beliefs, owe it to the town in which they live to see to it that those delegates here Monday and Tuesday carry home with them a feeling that Clanton is one of the finest and most friendly little towns in the state. Courtesy is a wonderful power, and costs nothing. A little effort on the part of each individual will work wonders to this end. Put on your smile and your glad hand for our visitors Monday and Tuesday.

Little Drops Of Water

A rain storm never worries a rock, but the constant drop of water wears away the most resistant stone. The repeated urge of repeated advertisement breaks down sales resistance, creates a desire to buy, and brings the customer to your store just as certainly as does the water make a hole after a constant dripping, even on the hard, granite stone. Most merchants know that the effect of repeated advertising is stimulating; there are a few remaining, however, who depend on occasional hit or miss advertising, and who, therefore do not obtain maximum results for their advertising dollars.

People appreciate the merchants who advertise because that merchant gives them information as to what is new in style, what is correct in price, what is the best in service and fashion.

Consistent, persistent advertising costs remarkably little. It takes your message to thousands of homes of responsive buying power in this community.

"Clantonians, Let's Talk Clanton."

Heard a story the other day. Will pass it on. A man in southern Minnesota, tired of life, its growing burden, walked a mile and a half to the railroad, laid down with his neck over the rail. The train was late. The man finally wore out, walked back to town and wrote the general freight agent complaining of the poor service of the road. Some persons are never satisfied.

Human nature says that we all like to be kidded. But I just can't agree with that, because I have found some folks right here in Clanton that can't be kidded. Instead of taking a joke as it is sent, they let their fur turn the wrong way and admit that the joke hit the right spot. Then I have found, since beginning this column, some real folks. Funny thing, these humans.

C. Fenn Jones seemed to be really enjoying the barbecue chicken last Thursday at the O. E. S. outing. Can't blame him either. Mrs. Jones had something to do with the preparation of those delicious chickens, and was that stew good? Just ask anybody who was there, and they'll smile and say yes.

"Clantonians, Let's Talk Clanton."

I couldn't understand why there wasn't a preacher at that outing. Dr. Exell nor Rev. Childs showed up, and I thought that preachers liked chicken.

I see that the negroes are still congregating as bad as ever down at the railroad on Saturday's. And another thing, I saw something that really didn't look so well. Some white ladies were having trouble getting through the bunch of negroes there Saturday night soon after dark. I'm glad that I haven't a sister nor mother who has to try to get through that bunch in front of the market, on Saturday nights. There are two ways of stopping that gathering. City officials have one method, and the citizens have the other.

"Clantonians, Let's Talk Clanton."

I have the pleasure of introducing to our readers this week, a very popular writer, Mr. Dooker Pooker, self-styled International Authority on Wimmim, author of "The Menace of Wimmim," and the originator of the famous "Dooker Pooker Pucker," the latest thing in the art of osculation. He also hangs onto his name "D. A. O." (Doctor of Applique Osculation). He states that he has an abundance of proof that the wimmim is rapidly becoming a menace to the peaceful and harmonious persecution of the nation's political, industrial and commercial affairs. Any member of the fair sex who sees fit to disagree with this famous gentleman, are invited to send in their opinions. Address Dooker Pooker, care this newspaper. He opens this week.

"The Menace of Women"

By DOOKER POOKER

The International Authority on the Subject of Wimmim

Mister Editor:

The wimmim has been making a monkey out of us men for generations, and unless something is did and did pretty dern quick, they will soon be ruin' and reigning and recklessly and ruinously runnin' this country. I suppose you have noticed where lots of the critters which thinks they is so smart, has been gallivantin' up and down the country, formin' clubs here and there, many of 'em for the purpose of reorganizing our Government little realizing that organizin' nothin' doesn't produce something.

Fortunately for us men, however, the effectiveness of their activities is necessarily limited to the extent of their intelligence; altho I'll bet theys lots of wimmim which thinks that just because they develop more rapidly than the men, they have the more intelligence, whereas it's simply due to their limited supply sproutin' quicker'n urn.

Now, Mr. Editor, as you know, we allowed the critters to first vote many years ago; but since that time they have took a mile,—and now they want to be voted for. Many of them has got their eye, if any, on the Senate and I suspect some of them even hope to occupy the white house.

But, Mr. Editor, thank goodness, there ain't no substitute for brains and therefore that man's dominion o'er this land can never be seriously threatened by these monstrosities, regardless of the insidiousness and perfidiousness of the treacherous, nefariousness of her pernicious initiatives; provided however, we don't go to sleep at the switch and allow them to run wild or something.

Now, Mr. Editor, I have an abundance of proof that by reason of their intellectual and other limitations, they are a menace to the peaceful and harmonious prosecution of the nation's political, industrial and commercial affairs, and I shall, if you like, offer it from time to tempus, pro bono of our homo. At the same time, I challenge the wimmim to prove they is not.

Keep Busy

It is no time to get blue. These dull times come every year, between the spending of cotton money and the making of more cotton money. If the merchants have no customers, they should advertise for them. If the church attendance is too small go out after the members and tell them to bring in their friends. The best way to keep off the blues is to keep busy, and when you are busy, you have no time to get blue. If the crop does not seem to grow as it should, work it and then work it some more. If the cow is not giving as much milk as you think she ought, feed her. If the hens are not laying as many eggs as you want, try a different feed, and if the pigs are not growing as you think they should, examine them for lice. The purpose in writing this editorial is to impress upon you the importance of keeping busy. Keep everlastingly at it and you will not have time to think about blue days and nothing to do. Every one can do something, if it is only to drive a nail or mend a shoe.

Brown Favors Free Textbooks In Schools platform follows:

Education

From the public schools to the colleges, I have ever been a staunch supporter and advocate of better educational facilities and have endeavored at all times to be a real help to this department and to those leading in this great work. I favor continuing the high standard of our present educational system and improving wherever and whenever possible. Payment of the incidental fee, which is now being charged by our public schools, should be eliminated during the public school term. This fee, which causes much dissatisfaction and even hardships upon some, should be taken care of in a revolving fund as now being carried on in other educational channels. Covering a period of ten years, I favor estimating the cost of free textbooks to the sixth grade, and submit a bond issue to cover the estimated cost. The public has been very generous in voting bonds for other purposes, and this being a very meritorious one, I feel confident of its passage. If free books are had, they will have to be paid for through some channel of taxes, and it seems to me there could be no fairer way.

Some of my best efforts in the cause of education have been given in the interest of that class of our people known as wage earners and the underprivileged—to place within their reach the opportunity of an education in the trades, thereby increasing their earning power and more adequately preparing them for useful citizenship.

Primary Laws

I am opposed to changing the single primary laws to that of the double. The abuses of the double primary was what brought about the change to the single, with its privilege of second choice vote. Such a change would practically eliminate all persons of moderate means from participating as candidates when they are forced into two primaries; besides, it would cost the candidates or tax payers approximately fifty thousand dollars to hold the second primary. A less number of voters would take part in the second primary, thereby making it a minority instead of a majority, as some claim. The single primary leaves the Democratic party in much better condition to meet the opposition in a general election. It is all wrong to have laws that will have a tendency to force candidates seeking office to expend more than the office pays. A double primary is only one step from the old convention system.

Agriculture

This is our major business in Alabama. It is a business that must operate whether conditions are good or bad, and is so constituted that it can not well be consolidated or banded together for its own good. Today, as a class, farmers are stuck in the mud and need a helping hand; their conditions warrant a great deal of individual help, as well as a class. Assistance must be put within their reach, and they should be given all encouragement necessary with which to meet prosperity half way. If I am honored by being elected your chief executive, I promise to give my best efforts to help farmers of Alabama.

Highways

By reviewing my past record you will find that I have always been in favor of good roads. This is evidenced by the fact that I was one of the organizers, and served as vice president of the Alabama good roads organizations in this state. I am still in favor of good roads and in the continuation of a good roads program, and wish to offer for your consideration a plan to take our highway program out of politics, giving the department a continuous working program to take care of not only our present but future requirements. I propose the issuance of bonds for the building of hard-surfaced and other highways, limiting the amount of said bond issues, that may be issued at any one time to correspond with our present income from automobile license taxes and the two-cent gasoline tax. If this plan were in force to-day, we could issue $5,000,000 in bonds. These bonds could be used in matching Federal aid appropriations, and in carrying out our highway program. I favor the continued equal distribution of the present two-cent gasoline tax as now provided by law among all the counties of the state.

The history of the gasoline tax in this and other states clearly shows that with the completion of good roads more gasoline is consumed, which, in turn, brings in additional revenue. By this method of issuing bonds the increased revenue will, of course, allow for increase in the bond issues to take care of our rapidly growing transportation requirements.

We have had, already, two $25,000,000 bond issues which caused the building up of a large number of employees in the highway department and after the expenditure of each bond issue the department necessarily became disorganized for lack of funds. This method of carrying on a highway program has cost the state thousands of dollars that could have been saved if we had had a continuous and progressive method of financing. One of my opponents is in favor of the "Pay as You Go" plan. It is my plan to "Bond as You Go," for the reason that after making a study of the states operating under the "Pay as You Go" plan, the public is paying dearly for the privilege of riding in the mud, and the development of these particular states has been greatly retarded.

The plan of financing and operating a successful highway program should follow along the same lines as any other business program. The product to be manufactured is roads; to produce this product it requires capital and working funds. If we place at the disposal of a competent highway department sufficient capital and working funds from our present income, this department will turn out roads which in turn will in reality pay dividends to the tax payers of our state in sufficient amounts to more than offset the actual taxes collected.

In the olden days when our country was first settled, rivers were our only means of transportation and our first settlements were found along these rivers. Later, when the canals and railroads were constructed, this means of transportation was followed by the pioneers. Today, we are facing an entirely different situation, and transportation on our highways is the greatest need for our growth and prosperity. It would be my plan to make of the highway department a business, furnishing capital and working funds in such a manner that the product turned out would produce dividends in as economical a manner as possible, and not to raise taxes.

Fact Finding Committee

One of the first things I would ask the Legislature to do, if I were elected Governor, would be to pass a joint resolution allowing the chief executive to appoint a committee of three of our most influential citizens of different occupations or business, whose duty would be to go into all departments of the state and see if there are any dead limbs which should be removed from the Tree of State, or any pruning needed. Let this committee publish its findings, together with its recommendations to the Legislature for action. Whether or not they find anything out of the way, a report of this nature should be made for the benefit of the citizenry of Alabama.

Workmen's Compensation Law

I would favor a good workmen's compensation law—one that would be equally fair to all it affected.

Banking

It has been shown for the past several months, that our banking laws are inadequate to meet the conditions that now exist. I favor the calling together of the best minds on banking in the state and work out a plan of amending our present laws, or draft new laws that would better protect our banking system.

Confederate Pensions

I am heartily in favor of the Confederate Soldiers and their widows being amply taken care of under our pension laws. In the 1919 session of the Legislature, I redrafted and put on the statute books a new pension law, at the same time raised the pensions of the Confederate Soldiers and their widows. This was known as Brown Bill No. 20 in the Senate. Following this bill, the Confederate Soldiers and their widows have had their pensions raised in the 1923 and 1927 Legislature.

Convict Department

This is one of the State's most complex situations with which it has to deal. Convict labor should not be allowed to compete with free labor. This department should not be ordered into counties where law and order already prevail and the laws properly enforced.

Prohibition Law

I believe in Prohibition and the upholding and enforcement of our prohibition laws.

Child Welfare

This is a most important state work and should be encouraged, built up and added to whenever practicable.

Public Health

This department has given to our state a national standing that is unusually valuable, not only to the state but its entire citizenry as well. It should be given liberal encouragement.

Deaf, Dumb and Blind

This institution should always have our most liberal financial assistance, as well as our sympathetic understanding and cooperation.

Insane Hospital

The Insane Hospital and Home for the Feeble Minded should not be neglected at the hands of the state, nor hampered for lack of funds to carry on this much needed institution.

Legislature

The next Legislature should only pass such laws as are actually needed, on account of the depressed and unsettled business conditions.

Party Peace and Harmony

I believe that our factional differences in the state should be cast aside.

if not all, as much as is possible in the interest of business as well as good citizenship. In the campaign for Governor it is my purpose to do all I can to help bring this about, and should I receive the nomination and be elected, this would continue to be my policy.

Capital and Labor

Realizing that both have a common and mutual interest, capital and labor should go hand in hand.

This department should be properly taken care of and adequate housing facilities provided. After being kept for a certain length of time, practically all of our important records go to this department to be preserved.

I am in favor of opening the Coosa-Alabama River for water navigation from Rome, Georgia to Mobile, Alabama. Also, greater improvement of water transportation on the Warrior river and other navigable streams in the State.

World War and Spanish American War Veterans should have all the encouragement and assistance due the defenders of our country, and for the splendid service they rendered.

Conclusion

In presenting my platform to the citizenry and voters of Alabama, I ask your support and influence in the coming Democratic primary to be held on August 12, and in the general election should I receive the nomination. I am a business man and my business is such that I could not afford a long drawn-out campaign, like some of my opponents, and I trust my friends will understand why I have not pressed my campaign earlier. If nominated and elected, I promise to give to the people of Alabama an honest, economical and fearless administration, and in this I offer my past public, business and private life as to what may be expected of me as Governor of the Great State of Alabama, with its added influence and power. I was born and reared in Alabama.

Respectfully yours,
WATT T. BROWN,
Candidate for Governor in the Democratic Primary, August 12th, 1930.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Carol's Romantic Coup Wins for Him the Throne of Rumania.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

CAROL CARAIMAN, once crown prince of Rumania, then an exile from his country, is now King Carol II after one of the most romantic and spectacular coups d'etat of modern times. Everything being arranged by his friends, he flew to Bucharest in an airplane and was immediately welcomed by the parliament, which voted to give him the crown and to make the little king, Michael, Carol's son, the heir apparent.

Practically the entire population of Rumania seemed to be glad to have Carol back, though the Liberal party voted his return was a "dangerous adventure" and refused to accept the new order of things. Carol signed a law legalizing all acts of the regency in the name of King Michael and also approved a general amnesty act; but he then proceeded to punish certain prominent politicians who spoke against him after his return. He told correspondents he would work constitutionally through parliament and that he had no idea of establishing a dictatorship. At latest reports he was having some difficulty in forming a government, since the National Peasants' party decided not to participate and therefore Carol could not accept his former position of premier. Carol's future family concerns were somewhat doubtful. His mother, Queen Dowager Marie, hastened to Bucharest from Oberammergau to welcome him, and there were confident predictions that he would be reconciled to Princess Helene, his former wife, their divorce having been annulled.

CHICAGO has been aroused to a tremendous anti-crime spasm by the cold-blooded murder of Alfred J. Lingie, veteran police reporter of the Chicago Tribune. Rewards totaling $55,000 have been offered for information leading to the conviction of the slayer; the city authorities have been subjected to the severest criticism for not suppressing the gangsters, and the police department is apparently devoting most of its attention to rounding up the known criminals or frightening them out of the city.

Lingie was a remarkably well posted crime investigator and was intimately acquainted with the affairs of both the underworld and the police. Presumably because he knew too much, he was shot down in broad daylight by one of two men, who made their escape in the crowds on Michigan avenue. The press of Chicago and of the entire country looked on the murder as a bold challenge of the gangsters to the press and there was a universal demand for the arrest and punishment of the slayer.

HALF a hundred lives were lost by fire and drowning when the steamer Fairfax of the Merchants' and Miners' line rammed and sank the tanker Pinthia, laden with 500,000 gallons of high-test gasoline, in Massachusetts bay off Scituate, in the midst of a dense fog. Two minutes after the collision the tanker exploded and flames swept over the liner. The sea around the two vessels was immediately covered with blazing oil and many panic-stricken passengers and members of the crews who jumped overboard were burned to death. The tanker speedily went to the bottom and her entire crew was lost. About eighteen persons on the Fairfax died in the accident and others were so badly burned that recovery was doubtful.

Federal authorities started an investigation of the disaster in Boston and had for consideration serious charges including the allegation that the Fairfax was traveling at almost top speed despite the fog, and that the liner's officers failed to give an adequate idea of the extent of the accident in early radio messages. Capt. S. J. Brooks of the Fairfax asserted, according to a federal steamboat inspector, that D. C. McNell, vice president of the Merchants' and Miners' line, instructed him to send the message to the company's offices in code instead of broadcasting an S O S call.

CONGRESS has finally disposed of the tariff bill after months of hearings, debates and discussions. The measure passed the senate by a mighty slim majority. Senators Reed and Grundy having decided to vote for it despite their belief that it was unfair to eastern industrial interests. The bill's passage through the house was of course much easier.

BISHOP CANNON of the Methodist Church, South, and of various dry organizations, probably will not be punished for contempt of the senate committee on lobbying, but his conduct has been reported formally to the senate. He appeared again voluntarily last week and repeated his refusal to answer questions relating to his political activities in the 1928 campaign. He already had explained that he did not intend to express contempt by walking out of the hearing without being excused. The committee in private conference decided it would be fruitless to attempt to punish the bishop for an alleged contempt committed before less than a quorum of the committee or to seek additional authority from the senate to pursue the inquiry and perhaps force Cannon to testify.

DISCUSSION of the naval treaty was complicated by the President's refusal to let the senate foreign relations committee have all the documents concerning the pact and the London conference on the ground that this would be incompatible with the public interest. Senator Johnson of California was especially insistent that the committee should have these papers since the senate has equal power with the President in the making of treaties. After much talk Senator Reed of Pennsylvania, one of the delegates to the conference, offered to turn over the secret correspondence on the treaty to Johnson on condition that the documents should not be made public. The Californian rejected this offer, and the committee adopted a resolution setting forth the contention that it is entitled to examine all documents relating to the London treaty.

PRESIDENT HOOVER nominated W. Cameron Forbes of Boston to be ambassador to Japan, and reappointed Chairman Legge and C. C. Teague members of the federal farm board.

REGULAR Republicans of Wisconsin held their state convention in Oshkosh and endorsed Gov. Walter J. Kohler for renomination. The delegates adopted a platform embodying what is called the "new progressivism," the aim of which is to provide a common meeting place for folks in the middle of the road between reactionaries and radicals. It reiterates the petition of the Wisconsin legislature asking congress to authorize a nationwide referendum on prohibition. Another plank calls for restrictions on the operations of chain stores.

The Democrats of Indiana also met, put out a state ticket and assailed the Republican party for all kinds of alleged misdeeds, charging that the people no longer govern themselves.

NOBLES of the Mystic Shrine in great numbers gathered in Toronto, Ont., for their annual convention, staged a wonderful electric parade that was almost wrecked by the immense throng of eager spectators, and enjoyed themselves generally in a city where they were not hampered by prohibition laws. Thursday they dedicated a peace memorial, the principal speaker being Senator Joseph R. Robinson of Arkansas. The Imperial council elected Esten A. Fletcher of Rochester, N. Y., imperial potentate and selected Cleveland, Ohio, as the scene of next year's convention.

PRESIDENT HOOVER awarded the Charles R. Walgreen prize of $500 for the winning essay in the second annual Gorgas memorial essay contest to Pauline Lodge of Lakewood, Ohio, a high school senior. She captured the prize in a field of 5,000 high school students all over the country. In addition to the five $100 bills handed her by the President, she received $250 for travel expenses to the National Capital.

JULIO PRESTES, president-elect of Brazil, returning Mr. Hoover's visit to Brazil last year, was the guest of the President and the government in Washington last week. Secretary of State Stimson and other high officials met Doctor Prestes at the railway station and he was escorted by marines, cavalry and artillery to a private residence placed at his disposal by the government. The chief feature of his visit was a state banquet Thursday evening.

WHAT may prove to be one of the greatest discoveries of medical science is announced by Dr. J. A. Pfeiffer of Baltimore. He says he has isolated the microscopic organism that is the cause of the common cold which is estimated to cause the American worker a loss in wages alone of two billions a year. With this micrococcus a vaccine has been worked out and Pfeiffer has proved successful in a long period of tests and that Doctor Pfeiffer and his associates say will immunize people against catching colds for one to three years.

SOUTH FLORIDA'S oldest financial institution, the Bank of Bay Biscayne, and three of its subsidiaries in the Miami district failed to open their doors last Thursday. Notices posted on the doors said the action was taken for protection of depositors and because of recent substantial withdrawals. Heavy withdrawals were reported by other Miami banks, but the fears of depositors were allayed by the arrival of $8,000,000 sent by airplane from the Federal Reserve bank at Atlanta. The Bank of Bay Biscayne listed total resources of $17,182,292 and deposits of $15,037,193 as of March 27, 1930, in its last quarterly report.

The Ohio state banking department closed the Cosmopolitan Bank and Trust company of Cincinnati and its seven branches because its $437,577 capital was impaired by the unsuccessful stock market gambling of A. W. Shafer, discharged district manager of the Henry L. Doherty company, New York, one of its largest depositors. After an initial survey, examiners said Shafer was short $623,000 in his accounts with the bank.

Poland Today

A Village Street in Rural Poland.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)
POLAND'S importance among the nations of Europe has been recognized by the United States by the raising of the United States legation at Warsaw to the status of an embassy. There has been a marked friendliness since the World war between the great republic of the Western hemisphere and the new republic of Central Europe, and a loan of many millions has gone from the former to help place the latter on a strong financial foundation.

American business methods have captured the imagination and admiration of the Poles, and scarcely a work on scientific management is published in America today that is not translated into Polish. Poland has industries that were begun before the discovery of America, but some of them are being rejuvenated by American methods under the guidance of American engineers.

Oldest of Poland's industries to be affected by new methods are her salt mines which were adding to the savor of Central European foods as early as the Tenth century. The first iron forge began operations in 1333 and may be looked upon as the beginning of the iron founding industry which now contributes millions of dollars worth of values each year to Polish manufacture. An important lumber industry, based on timber lands covering 52,000 acres, was begun in the Eighteenth century. A tree must be ninety years old before it is cut. The entire forest area of the country is more than 22,000,000 acres.

One of Poland's most interesting industries is a plant for building railway equipment that was started in Napoleonic times as a wagon factory. The textile industry keeps more than 3,000,000 spindles busy, and there are numerous factories for the manufacture of paper, chemicals, and metal articles. Germany, which is Poland's nearest western neighbor, exports more goods to the country than does the United States. In a recent year the United States furnished approximately 16 per cent of all Polish imports.

Old Poland Resurrected.

The Poland of today is not an entirely new entity. She is rather a resurrection of the old Poland which once was one of the greatest nations of Christendom. In size she outranked nearly every nation of the continent. Russia alone of the European nations is larger than Poland was at her greatest. In population she stood at the forefront of Europe: only Russia and Germany had greater populations before the war than are to be found in the lands that once were Poland; for unpartitioned Poland had an area of 282,000 square miles, and the lands that once lay within her boundaries support a population of approximately 50,000,000.

Poland was three times partitioned, and these partitionings were readjusted between the partitioners by the congress of Vienna in 1815. Where the original partitions had given Russia 181,000 square miles, Prussia 54,000 square miles, and Austria 45,000 square miles, the reapportionment of the Vienna congress gave Russia 220,500, Prussia 26,000, and Austria 35,000 square miles. Much of the land which Prussia secured, and particularly Kiev, had been identified with Russian generations before.

Poland, in the days of her greatest area, extended from a point within 50 miles of Berlin, on the west, to the meridian of the sea of Azov on the east; on the north it reached nearly to the Gulf of Finland and on the south down to the Khanate of Crimea.

Former Russian Poland.

What was known before the World war as Russian Poland is that neck of territory stretching westward between the Prussias and Galicia. This territory has an area almost exactly equal to that of New York State, yet, in spite of the fact that its extreme southern boundary lies north of the latitude of Winnipeg, its population is as great as those of New York and New Jersey combined.

Former Russian Poland, in this limited sense, consists of a great plain, somewhat undulating, with an average elevation of about 400 feet, sloping upward toward the highlands of Galicia on the south and toward the swelling ground paralleling the Baltic on the north. It joins the lowlands of western Germany with the great plain of western Russia. Its rivers are slow and sluggish, with their mouths often but a few dozen feet below their sources and seldom more than a few hundred feet below.

Russian Poland usually has a winter somewhat similar to that of New England. There is an even cold, with not a great deal of snow, but often with razored winds from the northward. The rivers of this region usually freeze over about the middle of December, and the Vistula is under ice for approximately 80 days during the average winter.

In the Eighteenth century, when the city of Warsaw, next to Paris, was the most brilliant city in Europe, this flat plain was unusually rich in herds and geese flocks, though almost bare of manufactures.

Poland's history has been a tragic one through the ages. Next to the Russians, they are numerically the most important of the Slavs. They first appeared in Great, or North, and Little, or South, Poland in the Tenth century, where they found other Slavic tribes in possession. The wise policy of their kings early induced the whole nation to profess Christianity.

People Have Changed Little. Of medium size, with round heads and healthful faces, the blond more common than the brunet, their physical appearance has apparently changed little. The working classes, who constitute nine-tenths of the nation, have always been laborious, frugal, enduring, temperate rather than abstemious, and intensely patriotic. Their szlachta, or nobles, have shown themselves impetuous, brave to madness, chivalrous, insubordinate, emotional, artistic.

During the formative period Poland was consolidated by the dynasty of the great Lithuanian, Jagellon, the Polish Wladislaus II—a succession of princes unsurpassed in constructive ability. Union with the Lithuanians doubled the population and the national resources. Together they crushed the Teutonic knights at Tannenberg in 1410 and half a century later at the peace of Thorn pushed them east of the Vistula. The Polish lands on the Baltic, together with Danzig and Marienburg, were recovered. The Duchy of Mazovia, of which Warsaw was the center, five centuries independent, voluntarily joined the kingdom which a few years later spanned Europe from the Baltic to the Black sea. The Reformation, regarded with a suspicion as having a German origin, only for a time disturbed the country.

The advantageous situation of the kingdom, the admirable qualities of its common people, and the development already attained, seemed to assure the greatness and permanence of the Polish state. Yet in Poland's history, there is disappointment on every page. The brilliant passages are episodes without connection or result. Nowhere else is so much valor wasted. The chasm was always widening between the nobles and the common people. The people paid all the taxes. The nobles, all equal, possessed all the wealth and power, but had no sense of obligation or responsibility. Intrepid in battle, they were ready to fight for the country only when so inclined.

The system of government was oligarchical in the extreme. Succession to the powerless throne was elective, native or foreigner alike eligible. Each election was an orgy of turbulence and bribery. Twice the throne was put up at auction. The liberum veto, established in 1652, whereby the negative vote of a single member of the diet nullified any act or all the acts of all the rest, culminated in anarchy and eventually brought about the destruction of Poland.

$2,500,000 In Divi- dends To Be Paid In Birmingham

More than $2,500,000 will be distributed in the Birmingham district on and just prior to, July 1, as big companies and corporations cut their dividend melons and declare returns on stock owned by Birmingham people.

That total will be divided into two parts of which about $1,500,000 will be paid to Birmingham stockholders by companies operating in this district and another $1,000,000 will come to citizens who own stock in foreign companies—those operating in other states.

The two largest melons cut in this district will be by the First National bank and the Alabama Power Co.

Special Dividend

The bank, in order to equalize its stock holdings preparatory to its merger with the American Traders National bank, will declare a special dividend which will total $500,000.

In addition the First National will declare its regular dividend of $75,000.

The Alabama Power Co. will forward checks to stockholders on July 1 to the total amount of $487,000, officials announced.

The American Traders National will pay a dividend of $84,500, of which $27,500 will be special. The Birmingham Trust & Savings Bank will pay its regular dividend of three per cent, or $30,000, according to Walter Henley, president.

One of the largest dividends paid in the district has already been forwarded to stockholders by the Southern Natural Gas Corporation. The company paid $1.75 on each share of stock or $87,500.

Others Swell Total

Numerous building and loan associations and real estate mortgage houses are now compiling their dividend figures which will help swell the total.

The Birmingham Electric Co. sent out 2,800 checks for a total of $28,310.25.

On May 1, the Birmingham Gas Co. paid dividends totaling $45,000.

The Birmingham Water Works Co., according to Harry Horner, operating vice president, will pay a quarterly dividend this month amounting to $37,000.

I. C. Beatty of the Birmingham Realty Co., announced a quarterly dividend for his company to the amount of $91,000, of which five per cent is a special dividend.

In addition to the local companies, large railroad, steel and rubber companies scattered throughout the nation were paying dividends to Birmingham stockholders.—The Birmingham Post.

In Memory

In the late afternoon of June 5th, 1930, the Death Angel entered the home of Mrs. J. L. McDowell and took from it our precious father at the dear old age of 56 years.

He was confined to his bed since the 23rd of February. Despite medical attention and the ministrations of such a sweet nurse, Miss Louella McDowell, friends and loved ones, he steadily grew worse.

All during his illness he quoted beautiful passages of scripture and prayed sweet prayers. Very often he called his children to his bedside trying to show them that beautiful way he could see to heaven, saying, "Children, follow in the footprints of father and you will be safe." Your father is dead but yet he liveth. Look on his face and smile.

He planned his funeral in the dead hours of night one month prior to death, saying, "I'm ready to go." Oh, how consoling these words were in the great hour of sorrow. He leaves to mourn his loss a widow and nine children, Ollie H., James Lawton, Mrs. Tommie Easterling, Mrs. W. L. Feltman; Mrs. E. B. Carroll, Mrs. Cornections Lewis, Jessie May, 14 years, Ester Lou, 11 years, Ivy Lee, 8 years; twelve grandchildren, father, John J., two brothers, J. Wand, J. E.; two sisters, Nancy, Mrs. Edd Giles.

Dear father, we cherish sweet memories of you, not only because you taught us in early childhood how to perform all duties of this life, but most of all because you taught us from God's great book how to prepare for a greater life or the life to come. Your vacancy in this home can never be filled. We can't understand why God wanted to take your smiling face from us, but some day we will understand all things where all will be glory with you in Heaven.

—Mrs. Anna McDowell and Children.

Excerpts From L & N Employees Magazine

Some 200,000 shipments, literally varying from a pin to an elephant, are handled annually by the Railway Express Agency. More than 12,000 trains, many of them exclusive express trains, are employed in the handling of this business, according to the L & N Employees' Magazine for June.

The express business is 91 years old, having been originated in 1839 by Wm. F. Harnden, a Boston and Worcester Railroad conductor, who operated the first express business between Boston and New York, using a carpetbag in lieu of the then unthought of "express car."

G. R. Smiley, chief construction engineer of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, tells the readers of the June issue of the L & N employees' Magazine that the L & N is nearing completion of its line from Chevrolet, Ky., to Hagans, Va., which will open up a direct outlet for the movement of coal from the Harlan County field to the Southeastern States on the Atlantic Seaboard. This line, 13.87 miles long, is being built through very rough and mountainous country at a cost of $5,300,000. It involves the excavation of 1,900,000 cubic yards of material from open cuts (the equivalent of digging a hole in the ground 100 feet wide, 100 feet deep and one mile long); 190,000 cubic yards of excavation is being done under the mountains for tunnels, and 73,000 cubic yards of concrete placed for bridges and tunnels. Six thousand car loads of material and equipment have been handled an average of 250 miles for use on the work, and, at times as many as one thousand men were employed.

The Louisville & Nashville Employees' Magazine for June announces the installation of a miniature broadcasting system in Union Station at Louisville, Ky., for the purpose of making train announcements, summoning employees, paging patrons, etc.

A regulation microphone transmitter with control panels, amplifiers and other necessary apparatus has been installed in the stationmaster's office. The transmitting apparatus, which is powerful, connects with dynamic loudspeakers located advantageously in all parts of the building and under the train shed, all of them operating simultaneously so that the voice of the announcer reaches everyone in the building at once. This innovation does away with the old system of a leather-lunged train announcer who had to run around to each room in the station informing patrons of each departing train.

The L & N Veterans' Club, an organization comprising some 2500 employees who have been in the service of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad for 25 years or more, will have its 4th Annual Reunion on June 14 at Evansville, Ind. A program of entertainment has been provided to fill up the entire day and several thousand Veterans, their families and friends are expected to be in attendance.

Milk

Read this item from the Mt. Vernon, Illinois, Register News:

"In St. Louis this week, milk became so scarce that deliveries were made only to families in which there were children, by some of the dairy companies. The trucks could not come with the milk and other food supplies, but the railroads can still hit the ball in the pinch and the trains came rolling in with the food for the people. With their own crews, the railroads cleared their own right-of-ways and the trains moved even during the worst of the storm, with half frozen railroad men in the cabs and in the cabooses."

On the income account of the L & N, this event is recorded by a tiny figure listed as "milk" under the heading "All Other Transportation." Its importance is more clearly indicated by the news item just quoted.

Railroads receive money in the form of freight, passenger, and other revenues and pay it out in the forms of service, employment, community development, wages, etc. On the receipt of adequate railway income and sensible limitations of railway taxes and restrictions, depend to a great extent the prosperity, growth, employment, and general welfare of the communities through which the railroads pass.

A "PIPE DREAM" COMES TRUE

AT THE REQUEST of Alabama Power Company, an order for $600,000 worth of Alabama made cast iron pipe was placed in this state recently by The Commonwealth & Southern Corporation of New York.

Translated into terms of material and labor, here is what this big pipe order means to Alabama workers.

Manufacture of the pipe would give steady jobs to about 510 men for a period of 90 days.

Production of the pig iron from which the pipe is made, would give employment to 57 blast furnace workers for 90 days.

Mining of the iron ore, used in the making of the pig iron, would give 122 ore miners work for 90 days.

Mining of the coal, used to make the coke which in turn is used to make the pig iron for the pipe, would mean jobs for about 367 coal miners for 90 days.

That's a grand total of 1,056 men employed in Alabama for 90 days, which means about 5,280 people receiving their support from this single $600,000 cast iron pipe order placed with Alabama plants. And this takes no account of the men employed in the coke by-product plants, in transportation of the various materials and numerous auxiliary services.

One after another they're driving up to our Texaco-Ethyl pumps—drivers who used to use other premium or special gasolines. They're telling us that Texaco-Ethyl is the finest premium anti-knock gasoline they can buy! We knew that—that's why we're selling it!

Texaco-Ethyl is different. It's a "dry" Ethyl! And this is something to remember—All Ethyl gasolines are not the same. The Ethyl compound is always the same but the gasolines to which it is added are not! It's the gasoline you start with that makes the difference in Ethyls!

And in Texaco-Ethyl you start with the famous new and better Texaco Gasoline, the original "dry" gas. When Ethyl is added to that you've got Ethyl Gasoline at its best! Because this "dry" gas vaporizes instantly and allows a complete and uniform diffusion of Ethyl Compound through that manifold into the cylinders. Here's anti-knock and performance that only Texaco-Ethyl can give you! Try it today.

Get Acquainted With A Good Writer

Edward W. Pickard, whom subscribers may already know as the writer of The Weekly News Review, which has been appearing regularly in this paper, does not have an opportunity in his columns to tell you about himself. His subject is world events—what other people are doing, saying and thinking.

Knowing that the readers who are following this interesting writer each week will be keenly interested in some of the "high lights" in his life, and knowing also that those who are not reading his informative articles each week may possibly be awakened to the realization that they are passing up something good each week, we are setting forth some interesting events in the life of Edward W. Pickard.

To begin with, Mr. Pickard is a world traveler who has visited all continents and many nations. This is right in line with his hobby, world history, ancient, medieval and modern. Long before leaving grade school young Pickard fell prey to the fascination of what men had done in long ago ages; how empires had grown and crumbled.

It was this lure of history which took him to the far corners of the world shortly after he was graduated from the University of Illinois. Bicycling his way through rural France and England, he learned at first hand the geography of the countries whose histories he had studied. News hunts have taken him to all parts of the globe, and as a reporter and editor he learned the ins and outs of American politics and the course of international affairs.

His extensive library contains many rare volumes, gathered during his travels. Most of his books are historical works covering the subject from the time of the earliest written records.

These are a few sidelights on the man who writes the three-column article, Weekly News Review of Current Events, which appears each week in this paper. His study of history, politics and foreign relations provides him with an adequate background from which to review and interpret in the light of his knowledge the great rush of world happenings.

Get acquainted with Edward W. Pickard today. Readers will find open to them a fund of information based on established facts and not merely the gossip of the moment.

SAFETY ON THE GLORIOUS 4TH

By Dr. Christmas Seal

In the good old days every Fourth of July has as many casualties as the battle of St. Mihiel. At one single celebration, for example, 415 lives were lost from lockjaw. In 1905 the fireworks of the Glorious Fourth made 25 good American citizens totally blind and 36 others were lucky enough to lose only one eye. Dr. Christmas Seal hopes for a sane Fourth this year, and suggests that it is still important to watch for injuries to eyes, severe burns, and wounds that may produce tetanus.

In eye wounds apply only cool compresses of boric acid solution while waiting for medical help. In slight burns a dressing of baking soda will give relief, but deep burns demand a physician. Apply nothing that is not sterile. In all serious injuries from fireworks have the doctor use anti-tetanus serum to prevent lockjaw.

Medicines are sometimes valuable in treating tuberculosis but can never take the place of rest in the open air and nourishing food.

It is not polite to gobble your food and gulp your drink—nor is it healthy.

If you fear hydrophobia better have your dog vaccinated against it.

Telephone Workers Are Proud of Their Chosen Vocation

At the close of the day's work telephone men and women have the satisfaction of knowing that they have had an important part in rendering an essential service to their fellow citizens.

In the Southern Bell System 23,600 of them, working as a highly skilled team, complete 8,000,000 local calls and 100,000 long distance calls every day and maintain more than 4,200,000 miles of wire, serving more than 1,000,000 telephones.

A job of this magnitude could be so well done only by intelligent, experienced workers who have a pride in their vocation and a sincere interest in the welfare and happiness of the communities they serve.

The courtesy and cooperation of the telephone folks who serve you is an expression of the desire of the entire telephone organization to render to the public the best possible service at the least possible cost.

JEMISON HAS TWO FINE TENNIS COURTS WITH MUCH INTEREST

Taking another step to give the young people of Jemison some good wholesome entertainment during the day, as well as at night, the Baptist church and the Presbyterian church have put up two tennis courts for the use of those who wish to play.

The Presbyterian court has been equipped with large electric lights for night playing. It was stated that much interest is being shown by the citizens of the town of Jemison in this summer sport.

Olive Rainer Elmore Is Given Birthday Party.

Mrs. V. J. Elmore entertained at a pretty party on Wednesday afternoon in celebration of the ninth birthday of her attractive little daughter, Olive Rainer. Games and contests dear to the hearts of childhood were enjoyed for some time and prizes were awarded Mildred Maddox and Peggy Page. Upon arrival of each guest the little hostess, assisted by Helen Roberts, served punch, also passed trays of candies. Much merriment was created when a large box containing a beautiful pair of white rabbits was sent in as a birthday gift from Burton and Reese Mullins. Later in the afternoon the children were invited into the house, which was attractively decorated with flowers carrying out a color scheme of pink and green. The center motif of the dining table was a beautiful white birthday cake embossed in white rosebuds and holding nine candles. A tiny pink parasol was suspended over the birthday cake and from this Vivian Lowery drew the ring. Grace Ezell drew the dime, Helen Roberts the button and Frances Popwell the thimble. The favors were miniature table lamps. Dixie Dainties were served.

The little guests enjoying this party were Martha Higgins, Ann Ross, Helen Roberts, Mary Frances Atkinson, Elizabeth Williams, Annie Cordelia Smith, Frances Smith, Dorothy Carter, Theda Wyatt, Blanche Timmerman, Mildred Maddox, Peggy Page, Billie Johnson, Grace Ezell, Nell Rockett, Mildred Gore, Vivian Lowery, Mae Aniece Polk, Lillian Smith, Frances Popwell, Mrs. G. Called Nation's Finest Bathroom

America's finest bathroom, according to the decision of the judges in a contest conducted at the national convention of the Tile and Marble Manufacturers' Association of America, held recently at New Orleans, is the private bathroom of Irwin S. Chanin, in New York.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By GRANT DIXON

Yale Fund

Every once in a while personal advertising columns in the New York newspapers carry an inquiry as to the whereabouts of anyone named Leavenworth. A man named Leavenworth has left a fund to provide a year at Yale for anyone having the same name. Only one Leavenworth a year may attend, and if there are several applicants, a competitive examination is held.

Helping the Poor

One of the older wills provided as follows: "I have 71 pair of trousers. They are to be sold to the poor, and the proceeds given to the poor. The garments shall not be meddled with, and only one pair shall be sold to any one person." The sale was held. The purchasers, when they took the pants home, found a $1,000 bill in each pair.

A Mistake

Architects, whom I admire chiefly because they have the knack of figuring out in advance just where the hot water pipe will go in every one of 200 apartments in a building, do make mistakes sometimes. I went backstage at one of the newer and better theaters the other night to speak solemn words with a comedian, and found him in a funny little coop of a dressing room. "Not much for a star, is it?" he said. "When they built the theater they didn't figure on dressing rooms, and found they had to put them in later."

Avoids Women

When you hear the name, Pirie MacDonald, you unconsciously think of the phrase, "photographer of men." MacDonald has been a photographer of men for 30 years, and not once in that time has he made a woman's portrait. Sixty thousand men have posed for him in that time.

Men who make pictures of women make unenlabeled pictures of men, says MacDonald, and he will have nothing of it. At Christmas time he wanted a portrait of his daughter, and he paid another photographer $180 to do the job.

Women, MacDonald claims, wear uniforms, while the men dress distinctively. "Take the Ritz ballroom," he goes on. "Out of 100 women, 95 wear gowns cut to the minute. Their hair is done the same, and they powder and paint by decree."

And the strange part of it is that MacDonald, thirty years and more ago, won four successive annual prizes for the best photographs of women.

Trained Monkey to Steal

Mexico City—Chapultepec zoo is serving not only as the residence of unoffending beasts, whose only mission is to entertain the crowds, but also as a prison for a monkey arrested by capital police as the confederate of a notorious burglar.

Benito Hernandez, renowned as a second story worker, last year convinced police authorities here that he had reformed. A suspicious crowd, the detectives who had many times caught him redhanded at his illicit work, continued for months to watch cotton from Egypt. Extra fine shirts also have in their weaves long staple cotton, possibly grown in Arizona or among the lowlands of the Carolinas, Georgia and Florida, or in the British West Indies, but more probably in Egypt.

"The silk of the necktie comes from Japan, of course; but if it is one of the cheap variety, sort of stiff, the kind that looks fine the first time it is tied, but the second, terrible the third, then it is probably loaded with tin from Singapore.

"The entangling alliances of this American's feet are indeed wonderful to contemplate. Four continents, at the very least, annually save millions of United States citizens from pat- tering around barefoot.

"Now for a look in the business man's pocket. That fountain pen with a bright case of casein—where did it come from? From a cow, not an American cow, in all probability, but an Argentine cow, because in Argentina there is a smaller demand for milk for food than in the United States. Casein for pens and similar objects is solidified milk. The gold of the pen point may be American—or it may be South African. The very point of the pen, the part he writes with, is not gold, but iridium most likely from the platinum mines of Soviet Russia's Ural mountains.

"The yellow pencil in the coat pocket has a lead of American or Mexican graphite, and paint colored by Rhodesian chrome yellow, bound by American or Argentinian linseed oil, and provided with a durable surface by lac from India, perhaps, or tung oil from far up the Yangtze in China, or kauri gum from New Zealand bogs.

"Paper of his pocket memo pad may be all-American; more probably it is Canadian. Cigarettes are doubtless of American tobacco with a pinch of Turkish tobacco from Greek Macedonia, too. It may be, and wrapped in cigarette paper from France. And the good American money in his wallet and his pocket, an American product surely! But no, the green of the greenback is chrome green made from Rhodesia or Mozambique chrome. He may shun a Canadian dime, but never a Canadian nickel, for nearly all our nickels are Canadian. The chief U. S. A. contributions to a nickel are the Indian and the buffalo."

The Modern Way

"JUST AS A MATTER OF FORM, I HAVE COME TO ASK FOR YOUR DAUGHTER'S HAND IN MARRIAGE"

LIGHTNING RODS

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

I had supposed, until I made a trip to southern Illinois a few weeks ago, that the lightning rod which once had so general a vogue had gone the way of corsets and consump- tion cures, and electric belts for relieving fits, and fakes generally which intrigued the credulity of the inexperienced and robbed them of their money a generation or two ago. I supposed that we all knew that buckeyes carried in the pocket neither prevent nor ure rheumatism, and that the lightning rod may be a menace to safety rather than a protection if not properly adjusted. But I am mistaken; the lightning rod, and Nancy tells me also lie corner, is coming back again. All through the farming district, as we drove down toward Metropolis, we could see the work of the lightning rod dispenser. Every house, every barn, every outbuilding, from woodshed to chicken roost, was bristling with lightning rods. Fourteen I counted on one farmstead.

I could guess how it all happened. Some silver-tongued orator, trained in salesmanship at college, had dropped in on the Browns and had sold them the proposition. Safety, protection, freedom from sudden death were all to be gained by the simple investment in lightning rods—the more the better. They fell, and, being the most prominent people in the neighborhood, were followed suit by the neighbors as meekly as sheep following each other over the pasture fence.

If it isn't lightning rods it is something else quite as foolish that we all adopt. Two years ago all the big boys in college had coonskin coats. I knew a boy who waited table and fired furnaces in order to get himself one and so he in style. Last year the coonskin coat was quite passé. All the real beau brummels had cam- el's hair. One just wasn't in it with- out a camel's hair coat. Next year it will be something else and the cam- el's hair coats will be thrown into the discard.

It was the same way with garters. Some one started the fashion of dis- carding garters and letting his socks hang in a discouraged way over his ankles and immediately every young fellow threw away his garters.

We don't think so much for our- selves; we follow the fashion; we do as our neighbors do. If Mrs. Brown has long skirts or bobs her hair or goes in for antique furniture, then all the neighbors follow in quick order. If Brown puts a lightning rod on the hen house, immediately all the chick- en houses in the township are fur- nished with lightning rods.

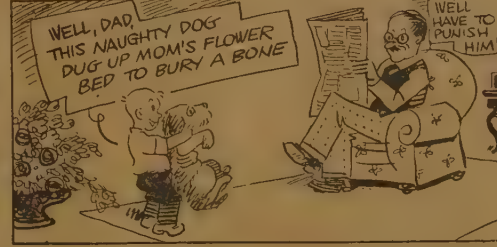

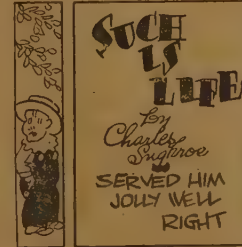

The story is told that in the late war a German private soldier was apprehended upon French territory and brought in to the American com- mander of the post.

"See here," the American said, "You have no business here. What's going to happen to you is that you're going to be backed up against the fence and shot."

"Well," the German said, ready to adopt lightning rods if that was the style, "Vat'eff'er las de rule."

Another case of lightning rods.

him, he assiduously pursued and completed this work and graduated with honors. During his attendance at the High School here in Clanton, he made his home with Mr. and Mrs. Mallie L. White, who also encouraged, counseled and aided him in every way possible, and who were friends that could be counted on at all times and in that sense of true friendship. While here attending high school, Clyde, as he was known here, worked after school hours and during Saturdays to aid in financing himself through school, and ultimately reached his visioned goal.

After completing the required high school course he worked until the next term of the University of Alabama began, and with only enough funds to enter that school, he was there determined that when fate declared he could not pursue further that then would be time enough to quit. Four years later found him receiving from the hands of the authorities of the University of Alabama an A. B. Degree diploma with honors. During the years he was attending the University, his spare time, after school, on Saturday and during vacations was utilized in work to make money enough to defray his expenses in school.

Leaving the University of Alabama, he went to Harvard University, in Boston, Mass., where he graduates this week in Medicine and Surgery, with honors. The interim from his graduation at the University of Alabama and at present also found Mr. Foshee devoting his spare time to earn funds to enable himself to pursue his studies at Harvard.

After his graduation, this week, he goes to one of the large hospitals of Boston, Mass., where he will engage in interne Medicine and Surgical work.

Dr. Clyde H. Foshee is the son of Chas. D. Foshee, one of this county's prominent farmers and citizens, who resides about twelve miles west of Clanton and near the Town of Billingsley. He is a brother of Dr. J. Clint Foshee, of Grand Rapids, Mich., who several years ago, like Dr. Clyde Foshee, worked his way through school and graduated with honors at Vanderbilt University, and who is now very prominent in his profession and in his home city.

Dr. Clyde H. Foshee was here in Clanton last Friday night and leaves today for Boston. While here he visited relatives and friends in the county.

Chilton County, its high school and every intelligent mind of the county feels that Clyde Foshee, has through his untiring efforts brought honor to himself and his county, and the News extends to him congratulations for his attainments and wishes for him a most successful career in his chosen profession.

The record of Dr. Clyde H. Foshee should be to every young man and young lady of Chilton County who have not the means to obtain an education, both academic and technical, an incentive to take courage and make up their minds, that they too, can climb rung after rung, the ladder that leads to success in life, and that it may be wise to bear in mind that:

"He either fears his fate too much,
Or his deserts are small,
That dare not put it to the touch
To gain or lose it all."

Those delegates and other visitors who arrive in Clanton Monday afternoon, will be assigned to private homes here for the night, the arrangements for which will be made by a committee in charge. Lunch will be served at the church on Tuesday for all visitors and delegates. The conference is expected to close about four o'clock Tuesday afternoon.

The News was given a gist of the present plans for the conference. Rev. H. P. Childs, pastor of the Brundidge Methodist church, Brundidge, Ala., and a brother of the local pastor, Rev. E. A. Childs, will preach Monday night, and the conference will be organized immediately after the sermon. On Tuesday morning, the conference will assemble again at nine o'clock, with Dr. W. R. Bickerstaff, Presiding Elder of the district, presiding, with the program as follows: Reports from pastoral charges. Licensing of young preachers. Hearing of report of local preachers. Various interests of the church will also be considered. At eleven o'clock Tuesday morning there will be a sermon by one of the outstanding visiting preachers.

Chilton Forces Are All Working Together

As they become members each farmer is issued a free insurance policy by the Alabama Farm Bureau Federation. Some are taking additional insurance which comes at a very reasonable price, in fact it costs only about one-third as much as an ordinary life insurance policy.

Officers and directors of the Chilton County Farm Bureau, who are working with members of the organization in making a success of the organized movement in the county, are:

W. L. Popwell, president, Clanton; T. F. Patterson, vice president, Verbena; J. S. Weldon, second vice president, Clanton; W. L. Parrish, secretary-treasurer, Clanton. Directors: J. N. Dennis, Clanton; W. L. Popwell, Clanton; H. G. Boyd, Clanton; H. R. Mims, Clanton; I. M. Deason, Clanton; E. R. Piper, Thorsby; Judson Strook, Verbena; J. L. Smith, Clanton; W. L. Parrish, Clanton; R. M. Foshee, Clanton.

Chilton County has five banks which are advising farmers to follow recommendations of C. E. Stapp, county agent, in their farming operations. These banks are the Peoples Savings Bank, the First National Bank of Clanton, Bank of Verbena, Bank of Maplesville, Bank of Thorsby. These banks are not only advising farmers to fertilize according to Auburn recommendations, but are telling them frankly they will profit by following Auburn recommendations in cultivation, feeding, and along other lines.

The Kiwanis Club has very emphatically endorsed the agricultural movement. It has appointed an agricultural committee to look after its agricultural affairs. It has some real interesting agricultural programs and makes it a practice of conducting tours to various farms of the county each year.

The two full time white vocational teachers of the county are devoting their time to educating farm boys and girls, and adult farmers along the lines of better farming. These vocational teachers are Earl Thomas, Isabella and J. P. Montgomery, Jemison. Two home economics teachers, Miss Cora Bell Maddox, Isabella and Miss Leacy Newell, Jemison, are spending their entire time with the girls and women of the county. Great agricultural advancements are being made in these communities.

Lawrence C. Johnston, Clanton, is the colored vocational teacher. It is said that he has done a great work in getting colored farmers of his community to follow improved agricultural practices and getting the boys interested in club work. His influence is radiating among his farmers and great improvements can be seen.

For about one and one half years County Agent Stapp has been active in carrying Experiment recommendations and the Extension Service program to the farmers. He is back of every progressive movement of the county for the betterment of agriculture.

Chilton County has two active strawberry associations; one is called the Clanton Strawberry Growers' Association, and the other the Thorsby Strawberry Growers' Association.

The newspapers namely The Union-Banner of which W. M. and T. E. Wyatt are publishers and proprietors, and the Chilton County News of which Billy Smith is editor, are of untold value in distributing valuable farm information among farmers of the county. They leave nothing undone when it comes to distributing news to the people they serve.

SON OF FLEETWOOD RASP. BERRY INJURED TUESDAY

Roy Raspberry, seven year old son of Mr. Fleetwood Raspberry, prominent farmer who resides in the Northwest portion of Chilton County, was painfully, if not seriously injured Tuesday morning while riding a mule to water. The mule which was wearing plow harness, is said to have become frightened soon after the father of the boy allowed him to mount the mule, and the young boy was thrown or fell from the mule and was caught by one of the chains and dragged for some two hundred yards while the mule was running at break-neck speed. A doctor was immediately summoned to the child, who was found to have been badly bruised and one of his eyes, it was stated, was so badly bruised that there was very little hope of saving it.

JULY FOURTH WILL BE A BIG DAY IN CLANTON

Arrangements Nearing Finish
To Handle Record Crowd

As stated last week, the ladies of the local Methodist church are sponsoring this event and all proceeds go to the church. The ladies are not allowing any grass to grow under their feet when it comes to making arrangements to take care of the record breaking crowd in Clanton on that day. The Chilton County Post of the American Legion will have charge of the baseball games and it is understood that there will be two games. Of course, there will be many other entertainments to keep one busy the entire day, and everyone should put their farm tools away just for this one day and come to Clanton, where fun and more fun will be in order, so that everyone may forget their troubles and join in with the merry-makers.

According to information obtained from the publicity committees of the day, several prominent speakers from over the state will be present here that day to deliver speeches. Among these speakers will be B. M. Miller, candidate for governor of Alabama, Judge Samuel F. Hobbs, Hon. Bibb Graves, Governor of Alabama, Dr. J. N. Baker, of Montgomery, Charlie McCall, a candidate for governor, Senator John Rogers, of Sumter County, Bill Allgood, a candidate for the office of state auditor, and Sidney Blain, a candidate for the office of state treasurer. Governor Bibb Graves is scheduled to speak at ten o'clock on the morning of the Fourth, at the high school grounds where the biggest part of the celebration is to be held.

This big day in Clanton, July 4th, is being advertised extensively over Chilton County, and over Shelby, Dallas, Jefferson, Bibb, Autauga, Elmore and Montgomery Counties, and hundreds of people from each of these counties are expected to be here. Make your plans for one day of rest from your work and come to Clanton for one day of fun.

A Trip To Shantung Province In China

By J. T. Williams

One's method of travel in China depends upon where he is going. The last time I wrote for the readers of the Chilton County papers about a trip I had taken it was on the train. This trip was taken on a steamer—and other ways.

I went first to Tsingtao which is about 350 miles up the coast from Shanghai. (Look it up on the map of China). As you may remember, it is the place that was held by the Germans before the World War. The trip was made on a small Japanese steamer. There was nothing of particular interest on the way up. Well, it did become quite stormy so that none of the food tasted right, and I went to bed for fear I might "feed the fish." (If (continued to editorial page)

Property tax payments by Chilton county into the state treasury for 1929 show an increase over 1926 of $2,782.44. From these figures it will be seen that the increase in revenue received by this county from the state for educational purposes alone was more than ten times greater than the increase in the property tax payments by the county to the state.

SUCH IS LIFE — Poor Father

Their Happy Birthday

By JACK DEVINE
(Copyright)

ELAINE YEARDON was twenty-three years, three hundred and thirty-four days, nineteen hours and twenty-two minutes old.

It was George Moffett's birthday, too. In three hours and twenty-two minutes George would be twenty-seven. And time, as either of them would have told you, was flying.

They were lunching in a French restaurant and George was keeping the waitress busy by pouring him coffee. At exactly 1:22 he flashed his sixth cup, snuffed out the twelfth cigarette, and uttered the nineteenth "damn" of the hour.

George, if he were to inherit a share of his father's estate, had been married before 4:47. Elaine could marry before six that evening and be inhering $50,000 left in trust for her as an uncle.

"And now," George protested, "we got to dig ourselves out of the hole your uncle and my father left us in. If that charming aunt of yours had insisted that you won't be twenty-four until six o'clock we could have been married this morning."

"The money goes to Muriel if I violate the terms of the will, and you can't blame Aunt Emma for wanting her own daughter to get rich," Elaine, why won't you?"

"Please, George, don't ask me that again. I've as much right to come as you have to yours. Besides, your hundred and twenty thousand isn't so much that we can afford to pass up fifty thousand dollars though they were eggshells."

"I know, darling, but—but what are we going to do?"

"We might appeal to your father's lawyer once more."

"You saw what his last telegram said. Not a chance."

"Old Daniel seems to be on the only hope then. We'll try him again, and if he can't help us now nobody can. The traffic lights were with them most of the way to the building where Daniel Reid had his law offices, so the trip didn't take long."

As they alighted from the cab, Elaine's cousin, Muriel, came out of Old Daniel's office building.

"Elaine, darling. Her greeting was too effusive. 'Hello, George. Happy birthday, both of you.' Then, as though she had just learned a state secret: 'Are congratulations in order? I hear today is to be your wedding day, too.'"

"They may be later," said Elaine, "but not yet."

"Well, good luck. I've got to go. Maybe I'll see you later."

When they were ushered into Old Daniel's private office he held out his hands, giving one to Elaine and the other to George.

"Hello, children. Have you found a solution to your problem?"

"No," said Elaine. "We haven't and if you don't find one for us we'll never speak to you again."

"And we've only a couple hours more," put in George, "so you've got to think fast if you want to hear Elaine's charming chatter the rest of your life."

"Sit down, children," said Old Daniel. "I may have an idea. Now that this has resolved itself into a matter of split seconds," said Old Daniel, "you were born at 4:47, weren't you, George?"

"Yes, sir."

"In San Francisco? And you, Elaine, were born in New York at six o'clock. If you two are married at five minutes after six tonight Elaine will be adding by the terms of her Uncle Robert's will. San Francisco is three hours behind New York. It will be only three o'clock there when you wire your father's attorney directly after the ceremony, he will get the telexgram a few minutes after four."

"Suppose he looks at the filing time on the wire?" asked George.

"You still will have the alibi that it wasn't 4:47 in the city where you were born. It is a form of hairsplitting, I'll admit, but I'm pretty sure it will work."

"You darling," said Elaine, leaping up and kissing Old Daniel. "I knew you would find a way."

"Have you got your license?" asked Old Daniel.

"We got it yesterday," said George. "And the ring?"

"It's at the jeweler's, being engraved."

"You and Elaine run up there and get it," said Old Daniel. "I'll meet you at the Little Church Around the Corner at five minutes to six." He started to open the door for them, but closed it again quickly.

"Here, here. Stop that, you two. Trying to make me jealous, George?"

"No, sir," said George. "Just rehearsing the most important part of the ceremony."

Sad Winners

Gov. Bibbs Graves of Alabama said at a dinner in Montgomery:

"The French are always complaining about the Germans. The Germans are sure, they say; the Germans pay over their reparations billions with a bad grace; the Germans hate being disgraced, and so on."

"Well, I'd like to cheer the French up by telling them about Cal Clay."

"Cal," said Wash White, "ah, but a bad loser."

"Yeh, Wash'n't. Ah, does, too," said Cal; "but all de same, colored man, Ah'd rather play wiv a bad loser man wiv any kind of a winner wot dere is."

Let Vast Riches Slip Through Fingers

London.—"It's all in the game!"

In that laconic sentence was expressed the fatalistic philosophy of a man who once was rich beyond all the dreams of avarice and who now lives in complete and lonely poverty in a remote section of the Transvaal. Nearly half a century ago the name of Samuel Honeyball was famous throughout the world as one of the four mining prospectors who discovered the richest gold deposit in the world, the Rand gold mines which have been valued at $1,000,000,000 and which have yielded five times that much to their lucky owners.

Found Wreck of Pauper.
Honeyball recently was found living in penury—slaggy, unkempt, aged, the wreck of a man who gained a world and lost it, the living hero of a stranger and more fantastic tale than novelists ever told. But he has no regrets, no resentments, no ill-feelings and but one explanation for the turn in his fortune.

It was nearly fifty years ago that

Londoners were startled by the amazing news from Africa that a rich gold deposit, the richest yet, had been discovered by four men in the bleak ravines of the Transvaal.

Stories of untold wealth began to be heard and before many months men from all corners of the world began to sift into the Transvaal.

Great Discovery Made.
And Honeyball was one of the heroes of the rush, rich and famous. And deservedly, for with his three companions Honeyball prospected in the wild ravines and baboon-infested plains.

Then the great discovery in the Witwatersrand district was made. Gold, conglomerate beds of it, were found. And in spite of the amount of precious metal the Rand mines have given up since they were discovered nearly half a century ago, the amount still there, waiting to be dug out, is still measured in billions by mining experts. But Honeyball is living in a remote section of the country, depending for his livelihood upon a pension of $3.10 a week.

How he lost his untold wealth is not known and Honeyball will not tell. He prefers not to discuss the matter.

AMBITION

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

We are all, young and old, obsessed with secret ambition. What we are have all intended to be what we are not.

Nelson, whom I knew as a boy, was going to congress. He pictured himself rising to oratorical fame, swaying the rulers of the nation with his fiery words, possibly landing finally in the Presidential chair. He died last week on a small farm in central Illinois, a good citizen but never having made a speech, never having had a political job in his life. Perhaps he developed a new ambition before he died. You, too, have had your secret ambition, and I mine, and see where we are today—as far from it as are the poles from each other.

Bryant, across the street from me—thirteen years old he is—doesn't care for school. He would be an aviator and fly across the Andes. Walter sees himself on the stage—Charlie Chaplin or George Arliss or even one of the "Gang." Tom is going to be a great engineer and build great bridges rivaling the Tay bridge of which he has seen only the pictures. No one of them probably will ever do what he now imagines, for Bryant is a poor mechanic, Walter has no stage presence, and Tom is flunking arithmetic.

It is curious how these secret ambitions cling to one even when middle-age has been reached or long since passed. Saxton is sixty and an accomplished surgeon, and so far as one could guess will stay at his profession until he is carried out by the undertaker. What he would like to do, he says, and what he intends to do, is to quit his profession, buy up the old farm on which he was born in New

"TROTTEUR"

One of the smartest "trotteur" costumes evolved by Schlink is shown above. The frock and scarf are of natural ponce hand-embroidered in shades of violet, while the coat is of white galynk with a matching band of fur on the chic cloche hat.

England, and raise sheep—lambs for the spring market—he's always adored sheep and he knows he could make a go of it. The joke of it all is that Saxton really thinks that he will some day do it.

Gordon is a farmer, not a particularly aggressive farmer, but making a living and something more. He's fifty and has never written a paragraph for publication in his life. He tells me he is going to quit the farm some day and strike out as a newspaper reporter. He imagines that it would be a pleasant and easy life. Poor man; how he would be disillusioned!

Smith, who is teaching English in a small cottage, in a moment of confidence, told me the other day that some day he hoped to have saved a hundred thousand dollars. He is going down to Florida then and play golf on the Bellevue-Biltmore Mtns.

It is a good thing to have an ambition even though we never realize it; it keeps us going.

Not Worried

Morden, England.—Parrot disease brings no fear to the healthy centenarian parrot that has been a pet in the household of Mrs. Mary Martin for more than 50 years.

Lone "Ace" Saved King's Throne

Paris.—If truth is not stranger than fiction, then R. H. Davis, O. Henry et al will do some turning in their graves when they hear of Antoine Maillet, the only man on record who ever defeated an army single handed. Some weeks ago, Maillet, a French war ace, undertook a little job for King Tafari Makonen of Ethiopia.

It seems that a certain Ras Gugsa Olie, a former husband of the former Empress Judith, craved to be king, and with that end in view drew up somewhat of an army which offered battle to the loyal troops not far from Addis Ababa, the capital. The king asked Maillet what he could do, and Maillet said he would see.

A few days later the intrepid flyer took out over the lonely mountains and treacherous ravines not to mention the impassable jungles and forests teeming with lions, elephants, crocodiles, boas, leopards, panthers and hyenas. When he sighted the enemy he dropped his majesty's regards. Those who were not killed ran.

DIPPING INTO SCIENCE

Why Birds Do Not Get Lost

The migration of birds, even across seas, is often explained as "instinct," but it is more than that. Their uncanny ability to find their way from their winter to summer home, and vice versa, is said to be due to the training of the young birds by the older ones, and to the keen sense of direction possessed by birds.

(© 1930, Western Newspaper Union.)

The king, learning of the news, was overcome with remorse at the demise of Olie, but nevertheless a reception befitting a hero was prepared at Addis Ababa for Maillet, who returned unscathed to discover that he had earned a place in history alongside of Lafayette, Napoleon and some of the other better-known French fighters.

Maillet's life was not uneventful during the World war. He brought down a dozen German planes, was captured, escaped, won the Medaille Militaire and four other citations, was wounded but continued in active service to the last. The war over, he enlisted with the French troops in northern Africa, where he served until 1928—a brilliant career covering 35 years.

It was only when even the African campaigns began to pall and there was no further reason for his remaining with the French army that he conceived the idea of becoming a soldier of fortune. It was in such a capacity, with the high-sounding title of director of aviation for the Abyssinian army (his being the only plane) that he won the battle of the lions and bon constrictors for good King Tafari Makonen.

Robin Halts Work on Milwaukee Man's Home

Milwaukee.—W. F. Schellin has stopped repair work on his house. That is robin redbreast's fault. Bricklayers had completed a veneer on the house as high as the second floor when Schellin called a halt. There was a robin's nest on a second-floor window sill with three eggs in it.

Mr. Schellin would like to get the repair work done. He does not, however, intend to permit a wall of brick to interfere with an event to which a certain mother robin has been looking forward for quite some time.

Trouble Trails Honeymooners

Seattle.—Two young honeymoon couples who eloped from California arrived in Seattle in time to be served with summonses in a $10,000 damage action—just 11 days after their double wedding at Reno, Nev.

All the way from Wheeling, W. Va., Albert A. Heunisch motored to Oakland to claim his seventeen-year-old bride, Sylvia. With him he brought his college chum, William B. Dawson of Pittsburgh, Pa., who was to have been "best man."

It was "love at first sight" when Davidson met Sylvia's girl chum and the four decided to make it a double elopement and wedding.

Driving to Seattle on their double honeymoon to visit Heunisch's uncle and aunt, Justice of the Peace and Mrs. John B. Wright, the honeymooners were arrested by highway patrolmen at North Bend on request of authorities at Easton.

"We couldn't imagine why we were detained," Davidson said, "and then we found that a car we passed Sunday had plunged off the highway immediately afterwards. We were supposed to be responsible."

In the car, which dived down a 30-foot embankment, were Mr. and Mrs. Joe Wilson, their eight-year-old daughter, Katherine, and Mr. and Mrs. John J. Cusworth. Mrs. Cusworth, Mrs. Wilson and her daughter were severely injured.

When authorities decided not to file reckless driving charges against the honeymooners they continued their trip to Judge Wright's home. The Wilsons and Cusworths, however, retained Attorney John J. Sullivan to bring personal injury actions against Dawson, owner of the car.

ROULING

LAYING HENS ARE ANXIOUS TO QUIT

Good Plan to Keep Them in House Until Noon.

"Laying hens are looking for any excuse to quit laying at this season of the year," says R. E. Cray, extension poultry specialist at the Ohio State university. "But there are several ways to fool them."
 Cray recommends that the layers be kept in the house until noon or the middle of the afternoon, to increase their consumption of mash ration. The morning grain feed should be reduced or eliminated, and wet mash should be fed at noon, to the amount of four or five pounds to each 100 birds. Regular dry mash, moistened with milk, is suitable for this meal. At the same time the amount of milk which is being fed to the layers should be increased if possible.
 Comfort for the laying hen in hot weather is an important factor in determining whether she will or will not quit laying. The laying house should be well ventilated and kept as cool as possible, for this reason.
 Green feed in liberal amounts will help maintain the laying record of the hens and pullets, as well as contribute to their general good health.

Influence of Minerals on Growth of Chicks

Experiments at the Wisconsin station show that chicks which were fed the Wisconsin ration of eighty parts ground yellow corn, twenty parts middlings, five parts chick size bone meal, five parts chick size ground limestone and one part salt, with free access to skim milk, did much better in recent tests than chicks that were fed rations in which part of the minerals were left out. In ten weeks the chicks which were fed the regular ration given above weighed 509 grams. A similar lot in which the bone meal was left out grew to an average of 486 grams, while a lot that failed to have limestone included in their ration weighed 383 grams. At the age of nineteen weeks the chicks weighed 1,107, 903 and 400 grams, respectively, for the different lots.

The above tests show the need of including minerals in the chick ration. A ration containing milk or milk by-products, combined with minerals in the approximate proportion used in the Wisconsin ration, forms the basis for most of the successful chick startlings. Yellow corn is a good ingredient for one of the grains as it contains a plentiful supply of vitamin A. The kind of other cereals used does not matter so much, so long as they are easily digested and attractive to the chicks.

Natural Mother Found Best for Young Chicks

"Give me a mother with feet and feathers instead of a brooder," an old-fashioned poultryman insists. He has his hens set in batteries of twelve, each hen and her brood to herself, the divisions being made with poultry netting. Corn and water are supplied to the hens to discourage their gobbling up the more expensive chick feed. The coops and yards are moved often to fresh ground, but the hens are not let out of the strawberry bed, garden or corn field are the favorite parking places of this breeder for his hens and chicks.

Feeding Green Corn

A common method of feeding green corn is to chop it into short pieces and allow the hens to pick it off the cob. In such cases the poultryman should be careful to see that the birds' crops are full at night. Even though some of the green corn may be consumed if the corn is not to feed some hatched corn at night to insure birds going to roost with full crops. The chief dangers from green corn feeding are intestinal disorders and partially filled crops, but if the poultryman realizes these dangers he will introduce new corn to advantage.

Vigorous Hybrids

In a study of hybrid vigor in poultry at Kansas experiment station, White Leghorns and Rhode Island Reds were used. In the pure breeds the mortality of the birds up to three weeks of age was 5.6 and 6.3 per cent respectively, while that of the hybrids was 1.4 per cent. The hybrids of both sexes outgrew the pure bred offspring. The mating of the Leghorn males and Red females produced more rapidly growing offspring than those of the reciprocal cross.

Poult's Worst Enemy

Lice are the worst enemy poult have to fight. They are usually found between the gill feathers of the wing. Lice will kill a poult quicker than they will a chick. Poults are very sensitive to strong odors. In treating them for lice it is well to use as little lice powder as possible, but be sure it is fresh. Sodium fluoride is used by the pinch method on poult after they are three weeks old. The hen that is given eggs of any kind should be well dusted with sodium fluoride.

Growers Protect Against Thrips

Tiny Insects Are Hard to Control Once They Get Good Foothold.

Cucumber growers have recently complained of curling of the leaves accompanied by whitish spots of varying size. This damage is caused by thrips, minute sucking insects, says the Cornell university experiment station, and growers should take care to control them before they gain a foothold.

Mistaken for Fungus.
 Thrips are frequently mistaken for fungus growths because the insects are so small. They are usually found on the under sides of leaves. Leaves so damaged curl as if injured by aphids, but the injury differs in possessing characteristic spots.
 A satisfactory remedy for thrips if applied as soon as the injury is detected is: One-half pint of nicotine sulphate containing 40 per cent free nicotine; three pounds of laundry soap dissolved in water, and enough water to make fifty gallons of the mixture. This mixture should be applied with a pump which has considerable pressure. Care should be taken to spray the under sides of the leaves for only when reached by the spray are the insects killed.

Dusts Prove Satisfactory.
 Dusts containing 3 per cent of free nicotine have proved satisfactory when applied on warm days when little wind is blowing. Such dust must be applied with a duster and not merely shaken over the plants in order to be effective. The plants must be enveloped in a dust cloud. The Cornell experiment station has received word also of considerable damage in other states.

Sweet Potato Diseases Prevented or Checked

A combination of several practices for disease prevention is necessary in controlling sweet potato diseases, any one of which, if omitted, will fail in securing the desired results. For the best control of wilt the seed should have been hand selected in the field last fall. The use of certified seed is equally good. Treat all the seed before bedding. Treated seed should be placed in new hot beds. Old beds are "hot beds" of diseases. New seed are pulled and ready for transplanting they should be set in fields that have not been in sweet potatoes for five to seven years. Unless all these steps are followed, one or several of the common diseases may be present.

Aphids Big Limiting Factors in Production

Aphids in the garden are limiting factors in the production of good vegetables. They are on the radishes, turnips, spinach, and other plants. The adults are about one-sixteenth inch long and vary in color from green to red to black to mottled. The color depends on which plant they are feeding. Ordinarily the aphids are called plant lice. Do not wait till the plants are damaged beyond repair to look for the bug that is doing the injury. Treat plants infested with aphids with nicotine dust containing about 7 per cent nicotine sulphate or 3 per cent free nicotine. The dust should be applied thoroughly with a good dusting machine.

Kill Perennial Plants During Summer Season

July and August are the best months to kill perennial plants. There is no set day that will give better results than another.
 The reason that this season of the year is most effective in killing plants is because the plant has exhausted its supply of food from its roots and in these late summer months is manufacturing food on which to live the following winter. If anything happens to prevent a normal food storage, which is made in leaves and is transferred to the roots, the plant will have a hard time living over the next winter. This applies to perennial weeds as well as trees.

Fighting Quack Grass Most Wearisome Task

Fighting quack grass is about as mean a job as any that exists on American farms. Experience has proved that it is almost impossible to eradicate the grass completely, once it gets a start and extends its rootstocks in the fields, and that ordinary cultivation is just about as bad as leaving the weed alone.
 The ideal weather for killing quack grass is hot days and cool nights, with just enough moisture in the soil to keep the grass growing. In midsummer, say in July, when the grass becomes sod bound and the plants are in bloom, the roots accordingly are weak.

Grades for Honey

For a long time liquid honey has been sold on the market on a basis of grade. The lighter colored honeys, such as that coming from white clover, have commanded the highest price and the darker grades, such as that made from buckwheat, brought the lowest price. Until very recently, there was no reliable method of determining the actual color grade. Those buying and selling honey depended upon their experiences and judgment.

Freedom From Weed Pests Is Difficult

Prevent Seed Formation by Mowing and Spraying.

Eternal vigilance is the price of freedom from perennial weed pests, according to Charles F. Rogers, former assistant botanist and deputy state entomologist at the Colorado Agricultural college, who is the author of a bulletin on "Canada Thistle and Russian Knapsweed and their Control."
 Copies of this publication may be obtained by those interested by writing to the Colorado Experiment station at the college.

"Canada thistle and Russian knapsweed, two of the worst weeds known to agriculture, are found associated with all crops and almost every kind of soil, and in every agricultural region of Colorado," the bulletin states.
 "The best way to keep any perennial weed out of a locality is to use clean seed, to clean all farm machinery before it leaves the place where it has been used, and to prevent flowering and seed production."

"Proper control measures for perennial weeds should consist of the prevention of seed formation by mowing and spraying, the burning of mowed weeds, separate, clean cultivation of infestations, clean fallow at intervals, crop rotation and smother crops."

Poison Bran Controls Cutworms in Gardens

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Seedling tomatoes, cabbage, lettuce and melons are frequently cut off near the ground by cutworms, especially in the spring and early summer, says the United States Department of Agriculture. A cutworm is the young or caterpillar of a night-flying moth. The moth lays its eggs upon plants or other objects and in some cases directly upon the ground and the eggs hatch into cutworms.

The common cutworms are stout, soft-bodied, smooth or nearly smooth, and cylindrical, varying in color from gray to brown or nearly black and sometimes spotted or marked with stripes. Cutworms ordinarily work at night, but often feed on dark, cloudy days. Many kinds of cutworms go begin work again early in the spring. Not only vegetable crops are attacked, but also a wide variety of ornamental plants and field crops may be severely damaged.

Cutworms may be gotten rid of readily by using a poisoned-bran bait made up of one peck (or five pounds) of dry bran, one-fourth pound white arsenic or paris green, one pint sirup or molasses and three or four quarts of water.

Onion Maggot Injures Garden Crop All Year

There is a little bug that does much injury to onions early in the spring and continues to work in the garden all the year. It is the onion maggot. It is footless, nearly white in color, and smooth. It feeds on the onion and when full grown leaves the onions to change to a small fly. The fly is about the size of the common house fly. The fly lays eggs on the onion, and the eggs hatch into more maggots. The best remedy is to spray the young plants with bordeaux-oil emulsion. The commercial oil emulsion may be used at the rate of 1½ gallons oil emulsion to 50 gallons bordeaux. Spray the plants thoroughly about once each week for five or six weeks.

Agricultural Hints

In a dry season paper mulch generally increases yield.

A farm without trees is like a dog without fleas; there is something lacking.

Cost per hour, with both tractors and horses, depends to a large extent upon the total hours work performed in a year.

Planting soy beans too deep delays their coming up and may permit a crust to form on the soil. One inch in a good seed bed is deep enough.

To get rid of mustard not only must all the mustard plants be killed and prevented from producing seed but the seeds in the soil must be destroyed also.

North Dakota has produced a new Golden Bantam hybrid corn, Golden Sunshine, reputed to be extra early, a week to ten days earlier than Golden Bantam.

The pie plant and asparagus have good food value and besides are indeed health giving materials. Some folks say that these two vegetables are better than medicine.

An application of poison bran mash the very first warm evening will aid in the control of cutworms in the garden and in the field. If alfalfa fields have not been inspected for this pest it is a wise thing to do.

Screw worms are a serious pest and one farmers should try to destroy. Immediate destruction of dead animals is the best way to kill them. By building a bonfire over the carcasses with wood and a can of oil, maggots of the screw worm fly can be destroyed.

Honey Production The average production of a colony of bees is about 50 pounds, but under favorable conditions 100 pounds might be produced.

ONE PRESCRIPTION MADE FAMILY DOCTOR FAMOUS

Seldom has any single act been of greater benefit to mankind than that of Dr. Caldwell in 1885, when he wrote the prescription which has carried his fame to the four corners of the earth.

Over and over, Dr. Caldwell wrote the prescription as he found men, women and children suffering from those common symptoms of constipation, such as coated tongue, bad breath, headaches, gas, nausea, biliousness, no energy, lack of appetite, and similar things.

Demand for this prescription grew so fast, because of the pleasant, quick way it relieved such symptoms of constipation, that by 1888 Dr. Caldwell was forced to have it put up ready for use. Today, Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, as it is called, is always ready at any drugstore.

Delayed Message Came Everlastingly Too Late

For 25 months Tom and Jerry had been fighting in the front line trenches, neither having received word from home during that time. The day the armistice was signed Tom entered the dugout, forlorn and dejected.

"What's the matter, Tom?" asked Jerry.

"I just got a letter from my girl and she's getting married. That's what I call tough luck."

Jerry looked up, and with tears, he could no longer control, streaming down his face, he mumbled:

"Tough luck! Say, you don't know what real tough luck is! I just got a letter from my district board telling me that I'm exempt!"—Exchange.

Harsh Colonial Rule

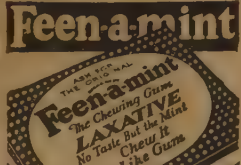

Whipping was one of the most common of punishments and a severe one, in Colonial times. Men were whipped for all sorts of offenses. In 1643 a man was severely whipped in Salem for sleeping during the minister's sermon and for taking a pass at the man who woke him up.

Another man was whipped for traveling unnecessarily on the Sabbath.

Why Some Towns Die

The 1930 census reveals many social and economic changes to those who can read figures. Of special significance among these is the story of towns that have practically passed out of existence with the close of this decade.

In many parts of the country sites where flourishing communities once existed are now inhabited only by a few hundred residents who remain to care for property or to spend their declining years. Back of every one of these dead towns is a story of a losing industry, of business that failed to keep pace with the changing times, and of citizens who could not believe that their towns could die.

But census figures show that communities do die, and if one could only take the time to study the history of a number of these places, one could find that the tragedy in most cases, might have been averted.

These cities grew up around small industries that were not able to cope with the competition of modern times and discontinued operations. The citizens of the community gave up in discouragement when they saw prosperity slipping away from them and they too abandoned the old town. Little concerted effort was made to replace passing industries with new business institutions. Little thought was given to the great problems of the community.

Let's give this matter some serious thought. Could Clanton meet with misfortune that would result in such disaster? Is there anything we can do to prevent it? Will concerted action enable us to compensate for any such possible loss?

If so, why wait until we are confronted with danger? Why not take an aggressive position now and enlarge and improve our city by bringing to play upon our problem the power of united community action.

One of the most outstanding questions now facing our town is the character of the leadership. Those officers who have been elected by the people to serve them should maintain a high moral standing in keeping with the dignity of the office which they hold.

Inside and Outside

A Lawyer Looks At Life

In a civic club recently a series of talks were begun in which the members discussed their professions as they look to the man on the outside and as they are. The first speaker, a lawyer, began by saying that many people think that a lawyer, to be successful, must be crooked; and pointed out that if lawyers in general were crooked the social fabric of the country would collapse. He said that it is the client in many instances who attempts the dishonest part, seeking to induce the attorney to assist in the violation of justice. A lawyer's faith in human nature was often shaken, he said, especially when he found white men ready to falsify against negroes on the assumption that their testimony would be given the preference. If a lawyer was saved from becoming a cynic it was only because of conspicuous instances of integrity. His talk recalled the remark of a physician concerning the difference in human nature as it appears to minister, lawyer and doctor: "The minister sees people at their best; the lawyer sees them at their worst; and the doctor sees them as they are." But it is pleasant to think that even a lawyer finds men who are not out to win at all costs; but who will state the facts and then ask whether they have the law on their side in the matter, ready to abide by the results.

Eulogy On The Dog

"Gentlemen of the Jury: The best human friend a man has in the world may turn against him and become his enemy. His son or daughter that he has reared with loving care may prove ungrateful. Those who are nearest and dearest to us, those whom we trust with our happiness and our good name may become traitors to the faith. The money that a man has he may lose. It flies away from his hands, when he needs it most. A man's reputation may be sacrificed in a moment of ill-considered action. The people who are prone to fall on their knees to do us honor when success is with us may be the first to throw the stone of malice when failure settles its clouds upon our heads. The one absolutely unselfish friend that man can have in this selfish world, the one that never deserts him, the one that never proves ungrateful, or treacherous, is his dog.

A man's dog stands by him in prosperity and in poverty, in health and in sickness. He will sleep on the cold ground where the wintry wind blows and snow drifts fiercely, if only he may be near his master's side. He will kiss the hand that has no food to offer. He will lick the wounds and sores that come in encounter with the roughness of the world. He guards the sleep of his pauper master as if he were a prince. When all other friends desert he remains. When riches take wings and reputation falls to pieces, he is as constant in his love as the sun in its journeys through the heavens. If fortune drives the master out an outcast in the world, friendless and homeless, the faithful dog asks no higher privilege than that of accompanying him to guard against danger, to fight against his enemies. And when the last scene of all comes and death takes the master in its embrace and its body is laid away in the cold ground, no matter if all other friends pursue their way, there by the grave-side may the noble dog be found, his head between his paws, his eyes sad but open in alert watchfulness, faithful and true even in death."—Senator Vest, of Missouri.

"ROUND TOWN"

—by Doug

Opinions expressed in this column by this writer have no connection with the general policies of this paper, being wholly those of the writer, in the manner they are written.

If anyone thinks it's easy to write a column each week during these warm days, they just ought to try it. When your mind is on everything except what you are trying to write, Clanton is on the road to aviation now. Got a good start Saturday with a glider. Several wanted to try a hop in the contraption, but just couldn't make up their mind to do it. And believe me it is sure a swell sport, just gliding around up in the air like a bird, and not a chance for any motor trouble, because the motor is missing entirely. It's just you and the glider when you get up. Heard a certain young fellow who has been going to see my girl, say something about thrills the other day, and he needs to take a hop in this glider. He'd get a thrill there, all right, and maybe he wouldn't interfere with my girl any more.

Hance Alred brought some of those Cuban cigarettes back with him from Cuba, and I found that they were nothing less than young cigars, and had the strength of a young mule. No wonder the Cubans are sort of black in the face. My face turned rather pale from the first draw of smoke.

Horsley White made a good guess, when he figured on the weather for his big day Saturday. When he started giving away cold drinks, he forgot to take under consideration the thirst of the folks here. He had some trouble handling the crowd, but didn't have any trouble giving away cold Nehi. By the way, does it pay to advertise? Ask Mr. White.

"Clantonians, Let's Talk Clanton."

Crutcher Ross was all beaming with smiles Thursday, and can't blame him either. He was presented with a fine young son Thursday afternoon, who will bear the name of William Crutcher, and has the qualities of handsome, just as his mother has the beauty qualities. Mr. Ross didn't say whether he was going to make a shoe salesman out of his son or let him be a gentleman.

Do the people of Chilton County like a good newspaper. Well, judging from the way the editor was writing out receipts for subscriptions Saturday, they do, and seemed to have picked the News.

Walter Campbell, the distinguished sounding gentleman, whose voice you hear over "The Voice of Alabama in Birmingham" was in our town the other day. Walter N. is one of those fellows who is your friend when you meet him, and he certainly knows his broadcasting.

Johnnie Plier, our city clerk, did some deep sea fishing while on his vacation in Florida, and I was just wondering if it was really deep sea fishing, or see deep fishing. That's on the coast, you know.

Stopped up at Stanford's Place, on the highway in Thorsby the other night, and that's a real place for a sandwich and something to drink. Nothing cheap about that place, it's right up to the minute, and just a nice drive from Clanton, especially on a moonlight night. Mr. Stanford is fixing up a nice little place to serve cold watermelon, and I'm going to be a regular customer. Stop there sometime and tell him I sent you there, then he'll know about things, that you would like for him to know, without having to tell him. And don't forget to meet Mrs. Stanford, the boss of the outfit. You can't miss the place, it has lots of pretty lights on it, but they are no too bright. "Everybody who is anybody stops at Stanford's."

"Clantonians, Let's Talk Clanton."

Mister Editor:

Have you ever considered the possible consequences of the terrible predicament which our U. S. Treasury Department is in today? Why, Mr. Editor, they 7,000 female and only 6,000 male employees there today. At that rate we will soon have a Secretary of the Treasury and while I wouldn't then look for no Miss Appropriations, some confiscations might become a Miss. But if that ever comes to pass I'll bet you a horse and buggy or something that our paper currency comes out trimmed in lace, probably issued in color schemes and possibly perfumed.

Now, Mr. Editor, they a multitudinous number of reasons why the critters haven't got no business monkey-in' with our governmental affairs. Science has proven that they are mentally and intellectually inferior to man and here we agree to disagree with Arthur Brisbane who insists that America should send a woman diplomat to some foreign country, if for no other reason than to prove that the wimmin has got more common sense than men. We admit that, Mr. Editor, but we insist that she hasn't got brains enough to use it. Suppose for instance, we should send a woman ambassador to Italy and some woman over there should show her the points of interest in Italy. The consequences would draw us into war with Italy. Frinstance: every time the Italianess would show our girl wonder a point of interest, our gal would remark: "That's nothing: we've got something in America that can back that off the map." Finally they would come to Mt. Vesuvius and the Italianess would inquire if we had anything in America that could back that off the map and our gal would reply: "No, we haven't; but we have got a little waterfall over there that can put this darned thing out in five minutes." So you see, Mr. Editor, the Brisbane idea means war.

you do not know what that means ask some of the boys who went over to France).

Out on a trip in China one is likely to meet all kinds of people. The little cabin I was in was about 8 x 10 feet. There were four other men in there with me—a Chinese, a Japanese, a Russian and a native of Java. Five nationalities in one little room. You may suppose we did not quarrel very much, for we could not understand each other. The Japanese understood English and we could talk. I do not know Russian or Japanese, and the Chinese spoke a different kind of Chinese from what I speak. When you are with such people you either talk by making signs or not talk at all. When the sea became so rough none of us felt like talking much.

But Tsingtao about 80 miles to Ping-tu is where the traveling came in. One of our missionaries, Rev. J. W. Lowe, who lives in Tsingtao, has a Baptist Ford that some good friends over in Missouri gave him. He also was going over to Ping-tu and proposed to go in his Ford. BUT it had rained and such roads! Some of you may remember that I have told you there are no roads worth counting in the parts of China where I have lived. But in North China they have two-wheeled carts and roads of a kind to run them on. It seems that nothing is ever done to keep them up. They are crooked, narrow and full of holes. Rough is no name for it. Well, we started out and got along pretty well for about ten miles, as far as the Germans built the road. Then, up, down, slide, slip, bump into a mudhole, catch your breath and then do it all over again. Finally we decided it was impossible and as soon as we could find a place to turn around we came back to Tsingtao and wired the people we could not come. In a few hours a telegram came saying, "Take the train to Lantsun (Blue Village) and catch the bus for Ping-tu."

The next morning we started out again by train. When we got off the train and found the bus, what do you suppose it was? It was a new Chevrolet Six truck with a kind of bus body on it. When I thought of how beautifully our old Chevy took us from Clanton to California and on to Canada, I felt sure we would get there. There were long seats along the sides and our baggage was piled in the middle, so there was not much space for feet. When fifteen passengers besides the driver and "conductor" were in the horn tooted and off we went. A street in a village is not much more than a gulley made by the tramping of people, carts and donkeys for centuries. We had not gone more than sixty feet when the wheels on one side were up on one side and the other side down in some stiff mud. I was afraid I would fall over and began to try to catch on to something, but there was nothing to catch on to. But after a few such places I decided there was not much danger of falling, for we were packed so tight in the seat we could not fall sideways, and so much bags and baggage in front we could not fall that way.

Not counting the bumping up and down and jostling about, we go along fine for about half a mile to the next village. Then with one side leaning far over in the half dried mud that powerful Chevrolet Six engine was dead. He cranked up and tried it again, but not one inch forward. "Hsia La," said the conductor, which being interpreted means get out. We all got out and then he could pull through. We had this experience only six or eight times on the way.

But there was one time we had to get out and push. The roads are very narrow—no room to meet or pass a cart except a wide place now and then. The farmers cultivate every foot of land they can. Sometimes the carts and cars get out on the edge of the crops to pass. To save his crops from cart wheels the farmer digs a ditch on either side of the road, leaving it just wide enough for a car to go along if there is not the least wobble. We hit one of these places just after we were out of a sand bed and one of the back wheels caved off in the ditch. "Hsia La, tui la," which means get out and push.

It is really impossible to describe that ride and the road but to give you a little idea of it, think of the speed we made. We had about 33 miles to go. That is only an easy before breakfast run over there in Alabama, but we started at 9:15 and got there at about 1:30. But even that is speed in China. I made this same trip in a shen te (mule chair) about seven years ago. Spent the night in a Chinese inn, got up at 3:30 in the morning and started out and arrived about 7:00 P. M.

After three days we started back. It had rained just a little, but not enough to interfere with travel. When we got a few miles away we found the rain had been a little heavier. The road kept getting a little worse until it was one slip and slide and bump and run in low gear all the time. Finally we pulled into a little village about 25 li (a Chinese mile) from the railroad, and the driver said it was impossible to go any further. Everybody out and unloaded. Finally after about two hours for lunch (?) they hired two carts to take the passengers on to the railroad. One mule was hitched in the shafts of the cart and the other one was out in front and was hitched up by means of long ropes tied to the cart. That was SOME riding, but it beat walking through the mud and got us there in time to catch the train for Tsingtao and my boat for Shanghai.

of its retiring high officials, and in 1925 gave a brief record of the life and antecedents of Col. Finnell, concluding with this paragraph:

"In all the activities of life he is known for his zeal, energy, fidelity and integrity. He is a man easy of approach, known to vast numbers of people of this and other states and none know him but to love him."

Woolsey Finnell

The subject of this sketch was born on a farm near Tuscaloosa, Alabama, on October 24, 1866, the son of Adoniran Judson Finnell and Narsissa (Durett) Finnell, representing the first families that settled in Tuscaloosa County, Alabama.

His grandfather, Colin Finnell, after being mustered out in 1816 of the Army of 1812, came to Tuscaloosa, Alabama, in 1817, to help General John Coffee survey the lands of Alabama, and laid out the present town of Tuscaloosa, Alabama, in 1821.

He was educated in the common schools of Tuscaloosa County, Alabama, the Tuscaloosa Military Academy, Tuscaloosa, Alabama, McAdory's School at McCalla, Alabama, and later doing special work at the University of Alabama at Tuscaloosa, Alabama, finishing his education by correspondence courses. He left McAdory's School April 6, 1887, and began work with an engineer corps on the Kansas City, Memphis and Birmingham Railroad, (now the Frisco R. R.) between Birmingham and Cordova, Alabama. After finishing that work, he was engaged in the location and construction of practically all the roads built in Alabama until 1902; beginning as axeman in 1887 and was gradually promoted until 1891 when he was Assistant Chief Engineer of the Chattanooga Southern Railroad. After finishing that railroad he opened an office as consulting engineer in Tuscaloosa, Alabama, in 1892, which he has maintained practically ever since.

During those years he located and built a large mileage of railroad and constructed railroad and highway bridges practically all over the South, and in some of the Western States. He constructed water works and sewer systems and many other engineering projects. He was the representative of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad in the government valuation of that line.

On August 8, 1922, he was elected Probate Judge of Tuscaloosa County, Alabama, and is now serving as such. He was married to Miss Margaret Hagler on October 21, 1890. From this union nine children were born, seven of whom are living. His grandfather, Colin Finnell, was one of the founders and first deacons of the First Baptist Church of Tuscaloosa, Alabama. The father-in-law of his grandfather, Daniel Brown, was the first pastor of said church, and from that time to this, the history of the Baptist Church in Tuscaloosa County, Alabama, has been the church history of the Finnells. He is and has been for many years a deacon in the First Baptist Church of Tuscaloosa, Alabama.

Military Record

America declared war against Germany April 6, 1917. On April 9th, Woolsey Finnell made application to stand an examination for commission in the Engineer Corps of the United States Army. This examination was held April 29th, at Tuscaloosa, Alabama. On June 19, 1917, he was commissioned Major of Engineers in the Reserve Corps of the Army. September 14, 1917, he was placed on active duty as Battalion Commander, 1st Battalion 20th Engineers at Camp American University, Washington, D. C.

September 28th, 1917, he was made commanding officer of 501st Engineers and ordered to Camp Merritt, N. J., on October 1st, with seventeen officers and eighty-six enlisted men, where the balance of this organization was furnished from the first unit of the Draft Army.

The 501st Engineers was organized and equipped at Camp Merritt, and sailed on the S. S. "Aeolus" for France November 26, 1917, landed at St. Nazaire, France, December 10, 1917. Ordered to Intermediate section near Foccy, Cher, France, December 16th. Arrived at Foccy, December 18th, and was attached to 15th Engineers for duty, building warehouses, railroad yards, etc., for Intermediate Ordnance Depot No. 4, and other miscellaneous engineering work.

On February 26th, 1918, orders were received to move to American Post Office 741 (about 5 miles east of Foccy and near Mehun, Sur Yerve) Cher for the purpose of building the ordnance repair plant there (this was by far the largest single plant built in France by the American Expeditionary Forces).

On April 5th, 1918, Major Finnell was made Engineer officer for the district which extended north and south from the south edge of Paris to Issoudun (150 miles) and east and west from Vierzon to St. Germain (30 miles); was also made Post Commander at the same time. Later was made disbursing officer and also purchasing officer for the district. The work accomplished at this post was railroad yards at the following places: Vierzon, Ordnance Depot No. 4, Ordnance Repair plant, Bourges, St. Florent, La-Chapelle St. Germain, du Puy, building third and fourth tracks for P. & O. R. R. from Port Vert to Bourges, building two steel railroad bridges and one stone overhead bridge, railroad yards at Cheneviere and Grigny, making a total of over 100 miles of railroad built. Building more than 500 barracks that housed 100 men each, building 12 Y. M. C. A. buildings, 6 Red Cross buildings, 1 Knights of Columbus building, 50 wooden warehouses, 50 x 100 ft. 30 wooden warehouses, 20 x 100 ft. 6 steel warehouses, 240 x 500 ft. 15 shop buildings of heavy steel construction that covered a total of over 50 acres. Central Post Office for entire A. E. F. and Central Records office for entire A. E. F. Hospital, 1,000 beds at Orleans Hospital at Headquarters A. P. O. 741, 500 beds. Camp hospitals at all of the other 14 camps, about 50 beds each.

Maintained 100 miles of highway, built 50 miles of roads in camps, built water works plants for 3 railroad yards, 15 water works for camps ranging from 1,000 to 100,000 gallons capacity per day.

Built an auxiliary steam power plant at Bourges, increasing the capacity of the plant 15,000 horse power. Built transmission line from Bourges to Ordnance Repair Plant, 9 miles, carrying 30,000 volts.

Installed at Ordnance Repair Plant, all electrical equipment, and more than 300 of the finest machines that could be had for repairing cannon and small arms. These machines ran from lathes that would dress a solid steel cylinder 22 inches in diameter by 60 feet long to the smallest drills. Also all kinds of wood working machinery. This plant began functioning October 1st, 1918, and thousands of guns were repaired in it.

There were many other duties performed too numerous to mention. Major Finnell was promoted to rank of Lieutenant-Colonel September 14th, 1918. Approximately 18,000 men were doing engineering work under his command at the time of the Armistice, November 11, 1918; 14,000 of these were soldiers and 4,000 civilians, including 2,000 Chinese. At headquarters, Camp A. P. O. 741, there were 8,000 soldiers, the others being scattered around in 14 other camps.

A very large majority of all the ammunition for the A. E. F. passed thru and was stored at some of the camps commanded by Colonel Finnell. While the Ordnance Department was responsible for the handling of this ammunition, Col. Finnell, as Commanding Officer, was held responsible by the Commander-in-Chief of the Army for all ammunition coming under his command. The amount of ammunition handled daily during May-November 11th was approximately 200 cars per day, besides special orders sent by truck trains very often. These truck trains ran from 30 or 40 trucks to more than 200 trucks.

On January 21, 1919, Col. Finnell was ordered to Paris for duty with the War Damage Board of the Peace Conference under General C. H. McKinstry and was made Chief of transportation and public utilities section for damages done all the Allies by the Central Powers. After this work was finished he was attached to "G-S" Paris section, General Staff, under General Reese and the entire American Expeditionary Forces. When the peace treaty was signed June 28th, 1919, he was ordered home, and left Brest, France, June 29, 1919, on the S. S. Leviathan. Landed at Hoboken, July 5th, discharged September 16, 1919, accepted commission in the Engineer Reserve Corps on January 20, 1920, and is now commanding officer of 344th Engineers with rank of Colonel of Engineers.

"Public education and public health are entitled to the great sums of money now being wasted by reckless extravagance. It is much better to practice economy than to levy a tax."

I believe in Majority Rule. It is Democratic Rule. I favored a majority Primary in 1915. I favored Majority Rule in 1927. I favor Majority Rule NOW. I will insist upon MAJORITY RULE WHEN I AM GOVERNOR."

"I have no apologies for the Democratic Party or its standard bearers, nor will I withhold my approval of the courageous "Z" who voted to preserve true Democracy in Alabama."

"Local self-government is a fundamental and time-honored principle of Democracy. Those who are responsible for law and order should be given full authority to enforce laws and then held strictly accountable for any failure to perform their their sworn duties."

The Mazaroff Mystery

THE STORY

Mervyn Holt is engaged by a man calling himself Mazaroff as a traveling companion. After a short tour they put up at the Woodcock Inn on Marradale moor. They meet, casually, Mrs. Elphinstone and Sheila Merchison. Mazaroff tells Holt they are his wife and daughter and that his real name is Merchison. That night Mazaroff fails to return to the inn and his disappearance is unexplained. Holt meets Sheila and tells her of Mazaroff's disappearance. They go to her cousin's (Vernor Courthouse) shooting box hoping to find some word of Mazaroff. There they meet Mr. Armitrude and Doctor Eccles. Holt is questioned by Police Sergeant Manners and a reporter, Bowens. Mazaroff's murdered body is found.

"Shot, doctor?" said the police sergeant. "Why, I never noticed—"

"Perhaps not," interrupted Eccles, quietly. "But you noticed that some wild animal or animals had destroyed the features, and it perhaps didn't occur to you to examine the back part of the head. He was shot through the head, from behind; shot dead. And by an ordinary fowling-piece. Look there!"

He held out a plump, smooth white hand, unclosed it, and showed us, lying in the palm, a couple of pellets. "Hiddid!" he said, significantly. "That's number twelve shot. And that's how he came to his death. Shot, from an ordinary fowling-piece, at close quarters."

I saw that Manners was considerably taken aback by this opinion, which was corroborated by the local doctor, who just then came out and fobbed us. It upset the police sergeant's theory, for it was not likely that the cattle drovers whom he suspected would carry a gun.

The two medical men went away, Eccles previously turning to me and saying that if there was anything he could do for me, I was to let him know, and Manners, for the first time, betrayed symptoms of uneasiness.

"This is a queer business, captain!" he said. "Shot! That never came into my reckoning. Well!—I must be doing something. But now, about him?—you know where his relations are to be found, of course? They'll have to be communicated with at once. Better telegraph to 'em."

The predicament! There it was—full facing me. But I was not going to tell this somewhat thick-headed policeman that Salim Mazaroff was really Andrew Merchison, and that his wife and daughter were within a mile of us.

"I'll look through his papers, upstairs, and see what I can find," I answered, evasively.

That secret of Mazaroff's weighed on me like lead. Ought I to keep it to myself?—or ought I to go straight to Marradale tower and tell Mrs. Elphinstone what I knew. It seemed to me that I ought, for there was this about the situation—if Mazaroff was really Merchison, then his wealth (and I was something more than certain that he was very wealthy) would surely go to his wife and daughter. Yet it was no pleasant task that confronted me. There was Sheila, with whom—I was useless to deny it—I was already in love; I loathed the idea of having to tell her that the father she had never known had been brutally murdered at her very door!

Yet—

Even then the advice I was longing for was coming to me as quickly as an old horse and a ramshackle fly from the station beyond the hills could carry it. Such an equipage drove up to the Woodcock and from it descended first a keen-looking sharp-shinned, middle-aged man, whom I at once set down as either a solicitor or a barrister, and second, a younger man, smart, alert, well-dressed. They hurried into the hall; through the open door of my sitting room I heard my name spoken. I went forward; the legal looking man turned and gave me a sharp inspection.

"Mr. Holt?" he said. "I am Mr. Lincoln Crole, of Crole & Wyatt, solicitors, Bedford row. I heard of Mr. Mazaroff's strange disappearance from the London papers last night, and I caught the night mail here. Now, has Mr. Mazaroff been found—or heard of?"

"Yes," I replied. "He was found this morning. Dead. Murdered."

He gave two successive starts at the last two words—then pointed to the room which I had just left.

"Let us go in there," he said. "This," he went on, as I led them in and closed the door, "is Mr. Frank Maythorne, whom you may have heard of as one of the dearest private investigators in England. Now Mr. Holt, tell me exactly—as I said just now, I want you to say this matter in the papers—your name, of course, appeared—and as I have acted professionally for Mr. Mazaroff since his coming to England, I was much concerned. Finally, I decided to come down here, and to bring Maythorne with me; I knew, you see, that Mazaroff has no friends or relations in this country, if anywhere, and—well, for certain reasons I was anxious about him. Now we have the worst!"

I was unfeignedly glad to see Mr. Crole and his companion: it was a positive relief to be able to share that awful secret with men accustomed to deal with such matters. I ordered breakfast for them, and while they ate and drank, I sat with them, and Mr. Crole and I exchanged preliminaries.

"I'll tell you in a few sentences all that I know of Mazaroff, Mr. Holt," he said. "He introduced himself to me a few weeks ago at my office. He told me that he was an Englishman who had been out of England for many years, and during his absence had amassed a large fortune. He said that he'd now returned to this country for good, and he wanted to buy a really nice house in London and settle down in it. He had heard of our firm and had come to see if I could help him. I promised to look out a likely house for him—and that's practically all."

"I don't know much more," I said. "I can tell you how I came to know him—"

He interrupted me. "Oh, I know all about that, and about you, Mr. Holt!" he exclaimed. "When Mazaroff put that advertisement in the Times, he brought the applications to me—most of 'em anyway. It was I who advised him to fix up with you. You got on together?"

"Splendidly!—admirably!" I said. "We'd grown to be very close friends."

"Aye!" he replied. "He seemed a likable and kindly man. But now, as you'd got so friendly, I wonder if you'd observed something about Mazaroff's habits—something, to be plain with you, that caused me alarm, and sent me off, up here, with Maythorne there, as soon as ever I read of his disappearance. Had you?"

"I can't say that I had," I answered.

He bent across the table, eyeing Maythorne and myself significantly. "I lunched and dined with Mazaroff two or three times," he said in a low voice. "And I learned a bit about him. Aren't you aware, Mr. Holt, that he carried diamonds in his pockets—loose—as if they'd been so many half-pence?"

That gave me a genuine start of astonishment.

"No, indeed!" I exclaimed. "I never saw him produce any diamonds—never!"

Crole laughed—dryly.

"I only hope he left them behind him in London, then," he said. "But I doubt it, even if you didn't see them. He'd made the greater part of his fortune in that sort of thing, and I tell you that he carried, loose on him, stones that looked to me to be worth—no end! I remonstrated with him, but he only laughed. Now—ask Maythorne there what he thinks, professionally?"

Maythorne smiled. "I think that a man who carries diamonds in his pockets, and pulls them out in public places, as you say Mazaroff did, is asking for trouble," he remarked. "And the probability is that he was followed here. Just give us the plain facts up to now, Mr. Holt—briefly."

I told them of all that had happened from the moment of Mazaroff's going out alone on the moor to the bringing of his mutilated body to the Woodcock that morning. And suddenly, making sure that nobody would interrupt us, I told them, word for word, of all that had passed between me and Mazaroff on the second evening of our stay at the Woodcock.

As soon as I had finished, Crole spoke, sharply and decisively.

"I believe all that!" he said. "I felt sure there was a queer mystery about Mazaroff. Well, there it is! And the next thing is—I'll have to be told to Mrs. Elphinstone, who is really Mrs. Merchison. And at once!"

"The sooner the better," agreed Maythorne. "Because—there are things by which he can be identified, that birthmark, for instance."

"Yes, at once," declared Crole. "He may have died—probably has died—intestate. He made no mention to me of any will. If he has died intestate, and his identity as Merchison is established, then this lady and her daughter benefit: the daughter mainly, of course. Holt, you and I must go to this place—what is it, Marradale tower?—immediately. I am revelation! Come, you and I will go, and leave Maythorne to his own devices. He'll not be idle."

I led Crole across the moor in the direction of Marradale tower, giving him on the way some account of the people he would meet there. We met one of them before we reached the gates—Sheila was just coming out, and I saw at once that she had heard the news.

CHAPTER III

The Landlord's Gun

Sheila came up to me with genuine sympathy expressed on her pretty face.

"I'm so sorry to hear this bad news," she said quickly. "I suppose it's true?—we've only heard very little."

"True enough," I answered. Then, as she glanced at my companion, I said: "This gentleman is Mr. Mazaroff's solicitor—Mr. Crole. He's just arrived from London—and he's anxious to see Mrs. Elphinstone."

She showed no surprise at this; probably she thought that Crole wanted to ask some questions about the neighborhood. She turned back to the house, motioning us to follow. We found Mrs. Elphinstone in the morning room. She gave us an unmistakably questioning look as we entered; it seemed, indeed, not too friendly. Sheila, after her fashion, went to the point.

"Mother!" she said. "It's quite true about this unfortunate Mr. Mazaroff. He's been found dead, on the moor, and this is his solicitor, Mr. Crole, from London, and he wants to see you."

"Merely to be permitted to ask a few pertinent questions arising out of the death of my client," Crole said. "I may mention, first, a fact of which perhaps neither of you is aware. Mr. Mazaroff was murdered!"

This announcement produced different effects on its two hearers. Sheila made a low murmur of horrified astonishment. Mrs. Elphinstone gave Crole a quick glance.

"Are you sure of that?" she asked. "That is the medical opinion, ma'am," replied Crole, with a frigid bow. "I know of no reason to dispute it. My client was shot—dead."

Mrs. Elphinstone pointed a finger to chairs near her desk.

"Won't you sit down?" she said with faint politeness. "You say you want to ask me some questions—pertinent questions? I really can't conceive what they can be! I know nothing whatever about this poor man."

"I think you saw my late client the other day?" suggested Crole, whom I had fully posted in every particular of our stay at the Woodcock. "He and Mr. Holt were standing at the garden gate of the inn when you and your daughter passed by."

"Oh, that!" exclaimed Mrs. Elphinstone. "Yes, I suppose I did see him—tall, bearded man, wasn't he?"

"You didn't recognize him, ma'am?" asked Crole, with a keen look.

Mrs. Elphinstone gave her questioner a particularly freezing stare.

"Recognize him?" she demanded haughtily. "Really—what do you mean?"

"What I mean, ma'am, is this," Crole answered, bluntly. "The man whom you saw, though he has of late years called himself Salim Mazaroff, was the man whom you married some years ago—Andrew Merchison."

I expected to follow on this. But nothing happened—there is, nothing particular. Sheila's lips opened a little in astonishment, and her eyes turned from Crole to her mother. Mrs. Elphinstone was sitting bolt upright, very stern and dignified, at her desk. Suddenly, and swiftly, a satirical, con-

Many "Black Fridays" in Financial Circles

"Black Friday" does not refer to a particular date, as often supposed, but is the name given to several Fridays on which financial panics have occurred. Apparently the term was first applied to the Friday in December, 1745, when the news was received in London that Charles Edward Stuart, the Young Pretender, had reached Derby, only ten days' march from the capital. A financial panic resulted immediately.

"Black Friday" was probably suggested by analogy with Black Monday, an old name for the Monday following Easter. The term

Belligerent Turkey

In Los Angeles, Calif., W. E. Proudweine, knife in hand, set out after a large turkey. The bird, angered, kicked the knife into Proudweine's arm, severing an artery. Then it leaped upon the bleeding man, and viciously tore his shirt to tatters.

temptuous smile showed itself round the corners of her finely cut thin lips, and she rose quietly from her chair.

"Follow me, if you please," she said. She marched us through two or three rooms, into the hall, out of the house, across the grounds, looking neither to right nor left, and so through the porch of the church, and under its fine old Norman doorway into the shadowy nave. Marching up that to the chancel, she suddenly paused, pointed upward, and giving Crole a frowning look, spoke two words:

"Look there!"

We looked. There, on the north wall of the chancel, was a plain, square tablet of Aberdeen granite, whereupon were deeply incised and gilded a few words:

"In Memory of
"Andrew Merchison
"Sometime Resident in this Parish
"Drowned in Mombasa Bay, October 17th, 1899."

I glanced at Crole. His face was inscrutable. He merely looked at the tablet, read the inscription, and turned, with a nod, to Mrs. Elphinstone.

"Now come back to the house," she commanded.

Mrs. Elphinstone marched us back to the house, and up the old oak staircase that led from the big hall. She went along one corridor after another until she came to a door. Selecting a key from a bunch that hung by a silver chain from her waist, she unlocked the door, and ushered us into a small room, wherein there was nothing but an old-fashioned bureau, a chair set before it, a bookcase filled with old volumes, and a side-table, whereon lay a much-worn cabin trunk. She went straight to this and laid a hand on it.

"Now," she said, looking at Crole. "I am doing more than anyone has the right to ask me to do. I am only doing it to set at rest, once and for all, the utterly ridiculous idea that you mentioned when you came here—uninvited. You will please listen to me—it is quite true that I married Andrew Merchison, when he and I were very young and foolish and headstrong. We did not get on. He made full provision for me: shared equally all he had with me, in fact, and left me. Eight months later, this girl was born. I and my friends did our best to protect him and make him acquainted with that fact: we failed. I never heard anything of him until the early part of the year 1900, when I got a letter from the captain of a steamer which traded between Bombay and Durban. You shall read it."

She produced another key, unlocked the cabin trunk, and from a pocket inside it, took out an envelope, from which she withdrew a letter. She handed it to Crole.

"You and Mr. Holt can read that together," she said. "Read it carefully."

I read the letter over Crole's shoulder. It was from one James Sinclair, who introduced himself as captain of the S. S. General Clive. He said that on his last voyage from Bombay he had taken on board at that port a passenger named Andrew Merchison, whom he described as "Mr. Merchison was bound for Durban. In the course of the voyage, a stay was made off Mombasa. On the 17th of October, the steamer being at anchor in Mombasa bay, Mr. Merchison disappeared. The writer's belief was that Mr. Merchison had had a sudden attack of faintness or giddiness, lost his balance, and fallen overboard, probably striking his head against the side of the ship as he fell. Nothing being discovered about his passenger, he had examined his effects, found Mrs. Merchison's address in a memorandum book, and therefore now wrote to her and at the same time forwarded Mr. Merchison's cabin trunk, and all that it contained, with other small matters lying about his cabin."

The solicitor read this letter through in silence, and silently handed it back to Mrs. Elphinstone. She replaced it in the trunk.

"This trunk and its contents have remained intact ever since I received them, now many years ago," she said. "Now you come and tell me that this stranger, calling himself Mazaroff, was in reality Andrew Merchison! Absurd!"

COMMUNISM MENACE TO WORLD

By BISHOP NIELSEN, Zurich, Switzerland (Methodist).

COMMUNISM and nationalism, the two aggressive forces which are continuing to inflame the imaginations of peoples in many nations of Europe and Asia, will seriously aggravate world problems unless they are purified and uplifted by the spirit of Christian love.

As long as Communism was only an economic theory, it was harmless enough. But now that it has become an active force, seething in many nations and rampant in Russia, from which it extends an alien hand into China, it is a world menace.

Communism is opposed to all religions, would destroy Buddhist and Confucian temples as well as Christian churches, prohibits religious instruction in schools and is training whole nations in material concepts.

Nationalism also is opposed to religion. If it is to benefit the world, it must be sublimated by the love of God who knows no boundary lines and no distinctions.

A historian has said that there are three ways of solving world problems—by force, by reason and by love. Force has been tried in vain. Reason also has failed because masses of people are ruled too strongly by primitive instincts. Love, he added, probably would work if it were ever tried.

CHANGE IN FEMININE MANNERS

By LADY ARMSTRONG, American Born Wife of British Peer

Women are softer and more feminine right now than they have been for more than ten years. During and after the war girls put on mannish clothes and did men's work. They accomplished something in business and art and it was all very well. But the reversion has come. They're back in frills—and glad to be there, in spite of the little fuss they seemed to make about it.

Are the present popular beach and lounging pajamas the forerunner of feminine trousers for street and evening wear? I hope I never live to see the day! And I cannot believe it will come in the near future. I don't believe the women themselves would permit it. They're happier wearing skirts. They fit their figures better.

To be sure, women will keep on doing things—they always have, for that matter—but they're really happiest as the complement of man. They've learned the value of frills and they'll cling to them.

And with the change they've made back to ruffles and trailing skirts there has come a definite change in their manners. The smartest, prettiest debutantes aren't smoking these days. They aren't drinking, either. By the scores I see them refusing cigarettes and cocktails.

OUR ECONOMIC SYSTEM FAULTY

By DR. WALLACE MCCLURE, Federal State Department.

Over-production and unemployment form a vicious circle in economic affairs. Each is a result of the other, and efforts to correct either, as long as the other persists, are likely to be unavailing.

It is difficult to imagine a stain upon present-day civilization more deep-dyed than this. The entire human race, save for the little handful of persons who comprise the wealthy classes, is crying out for more and more goods. The full time of every worker every day is needed to produce the goods desired. Yet untold millions of human lives are being depressed of all approach to happiness today because we have been unable so to organize our industrial system as to conserve and make fruitful our human resources.

If in even the greatest of national markets, our own, unemployment seems to be chronic; if the same thing is apparently true in Australia, a new country of vast resources and only 6,000,000 people; if the conclusion can hardly be avoided that only the widest attainable international markets are sufficient in order that existing difficulties of demand and supply may be set over against each other and canceled.

FAULT IN MEDICAL EDUCATION

By DR. W. W. BLACKMAN, New York (Homeopathic).

The modern tendency of medical education toward the emphasis of training of specialists rather than general practitioners is to be deplored. The general practitioner is and probably will always be the most important single factor in the practice of medicine. The most important function of the medical college is to train men to be competent practitioners and every other function must be held subordinate to this.

Specialization is the superstructure built upon the foundation laid in the allied sciences, and the more widely and deeply the foundations are laid, the higher and better the superstructure can be built upon them.

Unfortunately, the modern tendency of medical education is toward the training of specialists rather than general practitioners. Medicine cannot be subdivided into specialties. It is not limited to the eye, the heart, or the stomach, but covers the entire body in health and disease. There are great dangers in specialization. Unless specialists have broad training and experience in general medicine, they are not safe practitioners.

NEED FULL TIME PARENTHOOD

By REV. E. R. DAKIN, Milwaukee (Baptist).

Part time parenthood—that is one of the grave dangers of modern civilization. Full time functioning parenthood is needed if we are to have a generation that will be an asset in the progress of civilization. Within the last seven years apartment house dwellers have increased from 24.4 per cent to 48.8 per cent. Apartment house dwelling means a nomadic population. There is no stability of residence or church relationship.

The problem is complicated by 8,000,000 married women in industry. Not all are mothers; many do not want children because they can have more luxuries on two pay envelopes. Many who have children have to farm them out to nurseries for care while they work.

Homes are not what they should be unless a baby is preferred to a car. With each child there is born into the world a new opportunity for the betterment of civilization.

Injuries Follow Quite Closely on Cubs Team

The history of the Cubs in recent years is one of injuries, misfortune and blasted hopes. Here are a few of the outstanding setbacks:

1924—Charley Hollocher, rated with the best shortstops in the majors, retired from game because of ill health.

1925—Hal Carlson, purchased from the Phillies the previous June, suffered an attack of flu during the training trip and was able to pitch only in the last few weeks of the regular season.

1929—Gabby Hartnett, the league's outstanding catcher, injured his throwing arm while in the training camp and was useless for the season, except for a start in one game and occasional appearances as a pinch hitter. Carlson suffered another attack which prevented his getting into pitching condition until the second half of the season. Charley Grimm suffered a broken wrist when he bumped against the grandstand in a game at New York in August. He was absent while the Cubs were making their pennant drive.

1930—Rogers Hornsby was sent home from training camp because of soreness in his right heel on which an operation for removal of a growth was performed last winter. He has been in and out of the lineup since the start of the race. Guy Bush injured his right elbow when he felt fielding a ball and was out for three weeks. Riggs Stephenson was forced to the bench by a shoulder injury, caused by attempting a diving catch. Lester Bell, purchased from the Braves to fill the third base vacancy, has been unable to play regularly because of a sore arm developed in training. Hal Carlson died suddenly, presumably as the result of hemorrhages of the stomach. Hornsby broke his left ankle sliding into third base.

TERSELY TOLD ITEMS OF SPORTS OF DIFFERENT KINDS

Washington's three Sams have had much to do with the winning streak—Jones, Rice and West.

Catcher Dennis Cantrell of the Arkansas State Teachers' college team has signed a contract with the St. Louis Cardinals.

The Minneapolis club will erect a new park to be ready for the opening of the 1931 season. It will cost $300,000 and seat 15,000.

The new owner of the Portland club in the New England league is Dick Rudolph, one of the Braves pitchers in the wonder team of 1914.

Ray O'Brien, an outfielder, who has been out all season with an infected foot, has returned to the lineup of Denver of the Western league.

Sir Thomas Lipton says that he will lift the American cup this year. That remains to be seen; but if anyone goes away with that bit of silverware, Sir Thomas' genial persistency in attempting the feat entitles him to the honor.

Outfielder Jimmy Welsh was forced to drop out of the Boston Braves' lineup because of a wrenched knee.

Carmen Hill, veteran right-handed pitcher, has been sent to the Minneapolis club of the American association by the St. Louis Cardinals.

Pedestrian Given Right at All Street Crossings

It is of prime importance to all motorists to know that a pedestrian has the right of way at a crossing, despite traffic signal shifts. This ruling is upheld by the United States Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia. In effect the court holds that pedestrians have the right of way not only at uncontrolled crossings, but also when they have entered an intersection on a green light and further holds that the pedestrian has the right of way until he reaches the opposite curb, without regard to the change of lights during his passage of the crossing. "When a pedestrian steps from a curb to cross the street, having a green signal with him, he does so by way of invitation and he cannot be charged with contributory neglect if the signal switches when he is in the street. Caught in this position, the obligation rests upon the motorist, not only to observe the situation, but to wait until the crossing is clear," the decision declares.

Police Radio for Three Cities

Three more police departments—those of Youngstown and Cincinnati, Ohio, and Pasadena, Calif.—have been authorized to install radio equipment for crime detection. Short waves, that are outside the reach of the ordinary broadcast receiver, are used in communicating between headquarters and police cars on the run.

Churches Wage Radio War

Religious war is on in Holland and to which churches will be allowed to broadcast.

The Qualities of a Good Set

Tone quality is usually the first factor considered by the average buyer of a modern radio set. In buying a set compare tone, sharpness of tuning, lack of hum and distortion, volume, reliability of the manufacturer, ease of tuning, appearance and price. Good sets are built without screen-grid tubes, and good sets are built with them.

AUTOMOBILE FACTS

The real cause of noisy and screechy brakes is looseness, and the screech is a high pitched vibration.

British magistrates have held careless pedestrians liable for road crashes and ordered them to pay damages.

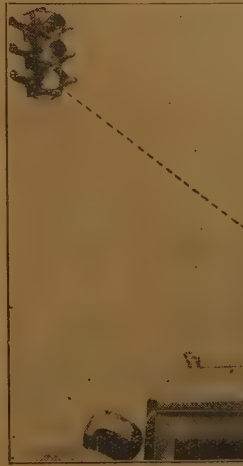

The navy parachute jumper who was injured in an automobile accident probably has his own opinion of the relative safety of air and ground transport.

Should the engine seem very rough at speeds of from 22 to 28 miles per hour when accelerating at a moderate rate, the vibration damper may need attention. It may become rusty after a winter of use.

Because engines are higher speed than they were once, they are traveling faster at all road speeds. This means higher oil consumption, and the owner who forgets it may be courting considerable trouble.

Another indication of the increasing importance of the automobile in Hungarian life is found in the recent issuing of an order by the ministry of the interior requiring all drivers to stop and render what assistance they can in case of road accidents, of sight.

SPHERO-PRISMATIC LIGHT DEFLECTOR

How the new sphero-prismatic light deflector makes it very easy for the auto driver to see the traffic signal lights, thereby preventing his using the old habit, "I didn't see the lights." The dotted lines show how the driver looks into the prism on the windshield and sees the reflection of the "stop" and "go" signal.

The first race in the United States occurred in 1811 between two barges, the Knickerbocker of New York and the Invincible of Long Island, the former being the winner.

This Doctor's Prescription Will Keep Your Family Healthy

Dr. Hitchcock learned during his 63 years' practice as a family doctor that 90% of all sickness starts with stomach and bowel trouble. He advised against the use of drastic purgatives which cause chronic constipation.

When any of his patients were constipated, showed signs of losing their appetite, or complained of indigestion, dizziness, headache, biliousness, or upset stomach, he gave them his prescription known as Hitchcock's Laxative Powder, and the trouble was soon removed. He found it safe for women and children; ideal for old folks, as well as for the most robust men.

Dr. Hitchcock's Laxative Powder quickly relieves constipation and makes the stomach and bowels pure and clean, by removing all of the poisonous fermenting residue of the accumulated undigested food that causes these troubles. Get a large yellow tin box for 25c at any drug store.

I was ridin' on a train goin' about sixty miles an hour when the rattler come to a sudden, grindin' jarrin' stop. Some of us passengers got out to see what was all the sudden halt for. A completely busted automobile scattered a hundred feet along the right of way told a mute but awful story. Over in a field where it had been tossed by the train lay a shapeless lifeless thing which a moment before had been a livin' humin' beln'. Some guy pointed to a sign on the crosstie nearby, "Stop, Look, Listen." And this guy believed in signs he would probably be alive today.

Johnson Building Is Being Repaired Now

Electric Shop has carried out the job of rewiring the building, and P. G. Marcus has had his experienced painters busily putting on the paint and varnish.

The first floor which was occupied by The Leader, one of Clanton's largest dry goods stores, is practically completed and ready for occupancy, while the second story is yet being repaired throughout.

Just when The Leader will move back into its former stand, was not learned, however, Mr. Lande, proprietor of the dry goods store, stated that it will be within a very short time, he hoped. On the back page of the first section of this issue appears the ad of The Leader, listing many bargains.

Mr. Vail is an outstanding citizen of Baldwin County and he and his newspaper have contributed much to the progress of his section of the state and each have advocated every progressive move to make Alabama bigger and better in every way possible.

Bob Vail is qualified to fill the office of Secretary of State and is a man who can be depended upon to do his duty.

While in Clanton, Mr. Vail called at the office of the News, where he is always a welcome guest, when in our midst.

REV. AND MRS. WILKERSON SPENT SEVERAL DAYS HERE

Rev. and Mrs. C. C. Wilkerson, of Columbia, Alabama, were visitors to Clanton during the last week end. While here they were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. V. J. Elmore, Mr. and Mrs. P. D. Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. J. N. Calloway, Mr. and Mrs. P. M. Pitts, and others.

Rev. Mr. Wilkerson delivered two forceful sermons at the Methodist church here, last Sunday morning and evening. He was pastor at the Methodist church here, when the present building was erected and served the church for four consecutive years and the Board of Stewards at the end of his fourth year, unanimously petitioned the Annual Conference to return him for another year, but due to his ability to build new churches the conference sent him to Moundville, Alabama, where he successfully built and dedicated a fine edifice, which is said to be very much like the present Methodist Church here. After completing the church building at Moundville Rev. Mr. Wilkerson was assigned to one of the large churches in Florida, where his health failed him, and for the past few months he has resided at Columbia, Alabama, where he went to regain his health, and his many friends in Clanton and Chilton County are glad to know that he is making splendid progress towards health and vigor and he stated that he felt that he would be able to get back into the work, full fledged, this coming fall.

We are always glad to have Rev. and Mrs. Wilkerson in our city.

or and alderman, and have been democratic beat committeeman. Under the new constitution of 1901, I was one of the registrars for St. Clair County, and among other capacities, have served my county as chairman of the Democratic Executive Committee.

In 1902 I was elected a member of the House of Representatives from St. Clair County—having the honor of being the first democratic representative elected from this county in 12 years. During the convening of this Legislature, I was instrumental in having a bill put on our statute books exempting cotton mills from taxation for a period of ten years, as an inducement for them to locate in the state. It is gratifying to note that under this law many cotton mills were erected in Alabama. Also, I was the author of a bill for a public road bond issue for St. Clair County. This marked the beginning of my good roads activities.

When William Jennings Bryan was nominated for President of the United States, during the National Democratic Convention in Denver, 1908, it was my privilege to serve as a delegate from the Seventh Congressional District.

The year 1910 marked the time of my election to the State Senate from the Sixth Senatorial District, comprising the counties of St. Clair and Etowah. During the term of this legislature, I served as chairman of the education committee of the Senate and put through a bill establishing the Alabama School of Trades, which was built at Gadsden. Also, I was instrumental in enacting into law the rural library bill of Alabama.

From the Sixth Senatorial District I was re-elected to the State Senate in 1918 and during the regular session had enacted into law several important bills, among which was the Brown bill No. 20, in which I redrafted our pension laws and raised the pensions of Confederate soldiers and their widows. Under this bill every legislature since has raised the amount of such pensions. Also, I was the author of the bill (which was enacted into law) matching federal aid in accordance with the Smith-Levey bill.

From the Seventh Congressional District I was elected a member of the State Democratic Committee in 1922, and in 1928 I had the honor of being elected National Democratic Committeeman from Alabama. In 1926 I was re-elected to the state senate from the Sixth Senatorial District and during this time was elected president pro tem of the Senate, in which capacity I am now serving. During this session of the Legislature, I put through a joint resolution asking a full investigation of our school textbooks, which was carried out.

My education was derived principally from the public schools. And whatever success has been attained in my business career has been the result of my own efforts and in the exercise of my own judgment.

On November 12, 1902, I was married at Ashville, Ala., to Mrs. Lila Inzer Freeman, daughter of Colonel and Mrs. John W. Inzer.

Four major objectives have dominated my business and political life. Increased educational facilities and an improved educational system of the state; an adequate and progressive method of construction and maintaining public roads and highways; development of the state's resources by the promotion and establishment of new industries, and last, but not least, opportunity for sufficient training in the trades to enable the masses of our people to more equally share in the prosperity incidental to such development.

I am now offering for governor of Alabama in the Democratic primary to be held on August 12, 1930, and, if elected, I shall follow along the same lines of progressive endeavor and service to the great State of Alabama.

The Men's Sunday School Class of the local Baptist church has been steadily growing in membership during the past several weeks, according to a check-up made last Sunday.

Owing to the enlargement of the number of members of the class, it has been decided to have the class meet in the auditorium of the church next Sunday instead of the room where they have been formerly meeting. This change will enable the men to have more room, and much more comfort on Sunday mornings. NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Ambassador Morrow's Victory in New Jersey and What It May Mean.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

NEW JERSEY'S Republican primary was the most interesting event of the week, and its repercussions will continue to be felt for many months. Dwight W. Morrow's victory in the contest for the senatorial nomination was more than decisive—it was overwhelming. The ambassador to Mexico had a plurality over Franklin Fort and Joseph S. Freylinghuysen of approximately 300,000. There was a fourth candidate for the short, and long terms, as was Mr. Morrow—John A. Kelley—but his vote was negligible. Morrow's tremendous showing naturally stirred up immediate speculation as to whether he would be Mr. Hoover's rival for the Republican Presidential nomination in 1932, which had been more than suggested several weeks previously by Governor Stokes of New Jersey and President Hiram Bingham. Some political observers thought this would be forced on him, while others were certain that he would support Hoover at that time and wait four years longer for his chance at the greater honor. Immediately after the result of the primary was known, President Hoover caused this official announcement to be issued:

"The White House will give every possible support to the Republican nominee for the senate from New Jersey. The President and the administration have every confidence that Mr. Dwight Morrow will be the best senator from New Jersey."

Some Republican leaders interpreted the President's move as a cordial gesture, intended to cause Mr. Morrow to feel so friendly to Mr. Hoover that he will discourage the activity of admirers booming him for the Presidency. Senator Blaine of Wisconsin, however, voicing the views of the wet leaders, said "It indicates a cautious step in the direction of a liberal attitude on the Eighteenth amendment."

MORROW made his campaign as an advocate of repeal of the Eighteenth amendment and the return of liquor control to the individual states. Fort, who was so badly beaten, ran as a pronounced dry. But the wets, in their rejoicing, should take into consideration the facts that New Jersey is admittedly a warring wet state, and that Morrow probably would have been victorious even if he had not said a word on the liquor question. The Anti-Saloon League said the nomination of a wet in New Jersey was no more significant than the nomination in Maine. "The phenomenal interest in the nomination of one wet to replace another," said the league, was probably on the theory that Mr. Morrow may become the national wet leader to restore the liquor traffic. If so, it is a vain wet hope, because Mr. Morrow has no plans to solve the liquor problem."

In this connection it is interesting to read that Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt of New York will run for re-election on a wet platform and that the Democratic party's state liquor plank will be much stronger than a mere declaration for light wines and beer.

Democrats of New Jersey nominated State Senator Alexander C. Simpson as Mr. Morrow's opponent and feel that he has some chance of success.

In Minnesota the senatorial fight among the Republicans was rather warm, but Thomas D. Schall, the blind senator, easily defeated Gov. Theodore Christianson and John F. Selb. Einar Holstad was the unopposed Democratic nominee.

Maine Republicans nominated Congressman Wallace H. White, Jr., for senator, giving him about 9,000 more votes than former Gov. Ralph M. Brewster received.

Prohibition was not an important factor in either of these primaries.

PRESIDENT HOOVER signed the tariff bill on Tuesday, and the new duties went into effect at midnight. No pictures were made of the Chief Executive affixing his name to the act, and no cheers were heard anywhere over this culmination of many months of work by congress. The plain truth is that the tariff measure does not please anyone in or out of congress, and it is especially obnoxious to nearly all foreign nations. Maybest was the best compromise that could be fixed up, and if there is a rebirth of prosperity in the United States during the next two years the Republican party may not suffer from the act. Of course the Democrats and the radical Republicans who opposed the measure think otherwise.

Senator Borah started out immediately to force the President to make use of the flexible tariff provision which Mr. Hoover had endorsed. He introduced a resolution, which was adopted by the senate, directing the tariff commission to investigate differences in cost of production and report at the earliest practicable date on shoes, furniture, cement, and a number of agricultural implements. To this list Senator Hiram Bingham (Conn.) by an amendment added bells, wire fence, and wire netting.

Protests of foreign nations against the new tariff continued to pour into Washington, coming last week from Germany, Czechs, Spaniards and Cubans. The French are very indignant over the American duties, but Ambassador Edge issued a soothing communique stating that they would have no serious effect upon French exports to the United States.

ANY doubt that the senate foreign relations committee would report favorably on the London naval treaty was removed when that body, by a vote of 4 to 14 defeated Senator Hiram Johnson's motion that the committee withhold disposition of the treaty until the President should submit all the correspondence and other documents pertaining to the negotiations which the committee had requested and the President had refused to furnish. Johnson, Moses, Shipstead and Robinson of Indiana voted for the motion.

REAR ADMIRAL RICHARD E. Byrd came home last week to receive the plaudits of his fellow countrymen for his achievements in Antarctic exploration. The bark City of New York brought him to the metropolis where the Eleanor Bolling, the other ship of his expedition, was waiting at quarantine, and the two vessels were escorted up the bay by innumerable craft and many airplanes. The welcome to New York was characteristic of that city—Grover Whalen and the mayor's committee, a marine pageant, a procession up Broadway with soldiers, sailors and marines, an address by Mayor Walker at the city hall and a presentation of medals. And all of it nearly smothered in ticker tape. With Admiral Byrd rode his wife, who had gone out in a tug to meet him. After the official doings Chancellor Brown of New York university conferred an honorary degree on the explorer.

Next day Admiral Byrd journeyed to Washington to be the center of even more imposing ceremonies. President Hoover received the entire party at the White House, and then the trustees of the National Geographic society gave a luncheon. After an official call on the secretary of the navy there were ceremonies at Arlington National cemetery where Byrd placed wreaths on the grave of Admiral Peary, Admiral Wilkes and Floyd Bennett. In the evening at the Washington auditorium President Hoover planned on Byrd's breast the gold medal of the National Geographic society. In all these events the admiral was accompanied by the members of his Antarctic expedition and they were acclaimed almost as loudly as was his chief.

FREDERIC M. SACKETT, American ambassador to Berlin, created something of a sensation in his own country by an address before the world power conference in which he attacked American power companies for their high charges to the consumer. He said "I know of no other manufacturing industry where the sale price of the product to the great mass of consumers is fifteen times the actual cost of production." Samuel Insull of Chicago, the utilities magnate, was in Berlin and having seen an advance copy of Mr. Sackett's speech, made objection to parts of it. This the ambassador disregarded entirely.

The incident was meat for Senator Norris of Nebraska, the ever alert critic of utility corporations, and he made a speech in the senate scolding Mr. Insull severely.

OUTSTANDING among the deaths of the week is that of Dr. Elmer Ambrose Sperry of New York, inventor of the gyroscope and world-famed scientist. Although responsible for the development and perfection of many inventions, Doctor Sperry was best known for his gyroscope compass and the application of the gyroscope for the stabilization of steamships and airplanes. This device was perfected after many years of experiment.

CHINA'S internecine war is running true to form. According to the dispatches from the Orient, the Nationalists are winning one day and the northern alliance of rebels the next. Anyhow, they are doing a lot of fighting and the casualties are heavy. Rebels have seized the customs house at Tientsin and have appointed as customs commissioner Lennox Simpson, an English writer better known by his pen name of "Putnam Weale." The government at Nanking was trying to divert imports from Tientsin to ports under its control.

WITH Julius Manlu again the premier, the government of Rumania under King Carol seems to be solidly established. Manlu now says he and the regency knew in advance that Carol was to return and gave consent, and indeed he claims that the coup was engineered by him. The young king is planning his coronation in October and has sent invitations to all the crowned heads and presidents of Rumania's World war allies to attend the event.

WILLIAM S. BROCK and Edward F. Schlie, two of America's best known aviators, established a new cross-continent non-stop record last week by flying from Jacksonville, Fla., to San Diego, Calif., in 38 hours, 55 minutes and 30 seconds. They started the return trip almost immediately and landed at Jacksonville with an elapsed time for the round trip of 81 hours and 53 minutes. This latter record was clouded by the fact that on the eastward flight they had to stop at Tallahassee, La., for fuel. (© 1930 Western Newspaper Union.)

How To See Venice

Scene on the Grand Canal, Venice.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

WITH the opening of the summer travel season the paths of travelers in Europe lead again to Venice, which, to exercise a lure more potent than cities wholly of the land.

A traveler should not expect too much of Venice. It is hardly fair. No great city can exist on narrow canals and be entirely a thing of beauty. One necessarily has had dreams of Venice and goes there with marked preconceptions. This follows reasonably enough, for so much has been written about this city of the sea, and of course the rosy, romantic aspect has been presented. If one does not set his mark inordinately high Venice will charm him. Novelty will "plinch bit" whenever beauty strikes out.

By all means the visitor should arrange to arrive in Venice by night. Under soft moonlight or under the rays of the dim and infrequent "street lamps" Venice puts her very best foot forward and strives to make the most extravagant dreams come true. The deep shadows under its bridges and the palace arches, the mysterious narrow black canal entrances, the picturesque leaning posts, the gentle lapping of the waves against the walls and steps, the swish of the paddles, the half brusque, half songlike calls of the gondoliers as they approach blind corners, perhaps the musical song of a gondolier in the distance—all combine to give one an entrancing entrance into the City of Canals. He leans back on his cushions during the long boat ride to the hotel—for of course traveler and luggage must go by boat—quite contented with life. This is Venice, and it is quite as it should be.

What the Day Reveals.

A night arrival is a rare but a successful one. It is as though one could contrive to meet a once beautiful lady, no longer young, at an evening garden party. Her wrinkles become soft lines. When they fade in the pillbox light of the morning they will have a certain suggestion of familiarity and memory will make them less harsh.

The first day in Venice discloses indubitable signs of ugliness as well as of beauty. Picturesque gondolas pass on the Grand Canal. So do the unpicturesque Venetian "street cars"—squat steamboats, little, but all too large beside the gondolas—their sawed-off stacks belching dirty black smoke. They raise choppy waves, as do the swifter little motorboats. The gondoliers glare at them and the traveler joins them in spirit in the choice Italian curses that they must be uttering under their breath.

More gondolas pass—and the trash boats of the municipality. In the waters that seemed so fair last night floats every conceivable sort of rubbish. Yonder is the beautiful facade of a fine old palace, and beside it, a building from which the stucco has fallen in great patches disclosing ugly bricks beneath. Perhaps the stones are falling away, too, at the waterline, letting the waves reach in for an inevitably greater destruction. Green slime covers the steps and the tilted wooden posts are rotting. Time is not the only desecrator of Venetian walls. The hand of the advertiser has been busy, too. And some of the walls that Dandalo loved and that scores of poets have sung about now inform the occupants of gondolas and "street cars" of products that can be purchased at their supposed advantage.

But thanks to a night arrival these things do not worry the visitor over much. He turns rather to the domes of Santa Maria della Salute with a tangle of masts against the sky; to the arch of the history-encrusted old Ponte Rialto; to the incomparable spires and domes of the Cathedral of San Marco.

One finds that there is a surprising amount of dry land life in Venice. A veritable maze of alleys and calli (little streets) and fondamenta (canal side-walks) exist. The best one can hope to do in a short stay is to gain a superficial acquaintance with the main way between San Marco and the Rialto.

Piazza San Marco.

The ways, whether narrow alleys or somewhat wider calli, have no side-walks, of course. The entire space, such as it is, is for pedestrians. At intervals the narrow ways open up into "campi" as the little squares are called. The name, "Piazza," has been reserved for the great square of San Marco facing the cathedral—the ultimate in dry spaciousness in Venice.

If one has only a picture knowledge of Venice, as all the world has not been there has, the Piazza San Marco will prove a surprise. The little open space that holds the famous statue of the Lion of San Marco is not the real piazza but only the anteroom, the piazzetta. Well behind the Lion column, around the Campanile lies a square greater than many a city with an unlimited supply of terra firma can boast. No wheeled or four-footed traffic uses this great square. It is given over entirely to humans and pigeons. Thousands of the latter make the Piazza San Marco their home, and there is seldom a time during the day when one can cross the square without carefully picking his way to avoid stepping on them.

When night falls again and cloaks the inevitable tawdry spots of an old city built on piles, one forgets his criticisms of the day. Out on the lagoon at the mouth of the Grand Canal, in a boat lighted by gaily colored lanterns, a company of musicians and singers begins a serenade. The gondoliers of tourists join the throng of slender black forms hobnobbing gracefully up and down, each with a silent, statuesque figure standing at its stern. Soft music and the gentle swish of wavelets fill the air. The lights of the Lidos gleam in the distance while nearer at hand black masts and spires stand out against the sky, the soaring shaft of the Campanile topping them all.

The Three Lidos.

Venice's playground is the Lidos, the chain of low sand islands across the lagoon, which have ever guarded the city from the Adriatic. Without these isles and the tide they control, Venice, or at least the Venice that is so well known, would never have been born.

On the Lidos were the original settlements that led to the establishment of the city of Venice on the islands of the lagoons. When Attila and his "hordes swept down on Europe in 452 A. D. many of the inhabitants of the regions farther inland took refuge on the Lidos. From 742 to 809 the seat of government of the region was at Malamocco, a few miles south of the present Lido bathing resort on the same island. The encroachments of the waves during the spring and autumn storms, and the vulnerability to attacks from enemy navies, led, in 809, to a general exodus to the islands on which the present city is built.

The Lidos today consist of three principal long sandy islands, divided by narrow water channels, and scarcely far enough above the water to be distinguished from clouds when seen from a distance. The Litorale, or beach, of Malamocco is the largest and most important, as it contains both the famous bathing resort and the small village of Malamocco. The Litorale of Pellestrina is a string-outlet village of fishermen and gardeners. Along it are portions of the great seawall, for, although the Adriatic protected its daughter from the guns of the heavy-draught vessels of the Middle Ages, it exacted constant homage in stone walls and breakwaters.

Warning Issued

A warning against fraudulent brokers and promoters who are offering stock in foreign Ford motor companies was issued today by the Better Business Bureau of Detroit in conjunction with the National Better Business Bureau and affiliated offices throughout the United States and Canada.

Relying on the goodwill and integrity of the Ford name, thousands of persons throughout the country have purchased stocks which either turned out to be spurious or were not delivered at all, the warning said. There is no way of estimating the financial loss involved.

"There are a number of fraudulent concerns in various parts of the country that represent themselves as brokerage houses and that offer stocks in various 'foreign Ford companies,'" the statement from the Better Business Bureau said.

"Several of these companies sell on the partial payment plan. They offer stock for stipulated down payment and a fixed sum per month. Before the final payment becomes due and before the stock is delivered to the purchaser, the company goes out of business and its officers disappear only to begin operations at another location and under another name.

"Stocks of the Ford Motor Company of England, Ltd., and the Ford Motor Company of France are listed on the New York Curb market and the prices at which they are currently selling are printed in the financial pages of the newspapers. Nevertheless many persons are being led by unscrupulous brokers to pay far in excess of the market prices.

"The majority of stock brokers, of course, are honest. Our warning is directed solely against the fraudulent concerns that carry on their fleecing of the public under the guise of reputable concerns. Anyone contemplating the purchase of stocks should first consult his local Better Business Bureau."

plained his marriage to four women by testifying he was "searching for happiness."

Observing eight negroes with suspicious looking filled pillow slips, Julius Cohen, 13-year-old St. Louis boy, notified police and $2,000 worth of stolen goods were recovered.

Attorney H. J. Borsje, of Memphis pleaded an insurance case for the widow of J. E. Williams, winning the case and also the widow, whom he married.

News From South Clanton

Editor News:

Well, it's just like I told you. South Clanton is getting bigger and better every day. The "panic" seems to have given it the go by so far. For instance Duncan Wells has just completed the entire overhauling of his nice little home and now he has a nifty city residence. It is so different and so much more classy than it was that actually Duncan can hardly recognize it himself when he comes in from work. I have noticed that he always drives slow now as he comes in and some of them say he has to count the other houses as he passes so he can tell when he gets home.

Van Smith has also had an artistic and fancy job of painting done to his store front. It hardly looks like the same place and adds much to the beauty of the surroundings. Mr. Lowe has also had some improvements and painting done at his store that make it even more inviting than it was. A residence right on the south of Lowe's store is being moved and added to and will be a handsome and commodious home when the work is completed.

Mr. Tom Taylor of the Taylor Wholesale Grocery firm of Taylor Bros., in Clanton, is preparing him a home here that will banish all thoughts of moving at his house when it is finally completed and he moves in. He bought the former home of Judge J. W. E. Gullidge here, with some acreage attached. He is moving the Gullidge house to another lot and is preparing to have a home erected just to suit him and his family, and believe me, when he completes it, it will be worth your time to drive over and take a squint at it, so you will be prepared to build you one like it when you get some girl to keep house for you—if you ever do.

The Harris boys have given their store building a neat and attractive spring suit. It looks nifty and inviting now in its new dress up.

I believe I have discussed what Capt. Wiley Smith's hobby is, and that is growing short order cotton on poor land. For a good long time, during that 33-day dry spell we all had to enjoy, when his big old rooster hollered for day every morning you would see him out vainly looking for a sprouted seed. He would put on his glasses and get down close, but there was nothing doing. Just before he got ready to sift the dirt and get his seed back, the rain came and his seed came up. That just as well prepare to do its duty, for if it starts any "monkey shines" like taking the "black root" or "shedding" he will be right on the job and stop it if he has to plough it up. You ask him about it.

Another prominent Clanton business man belongs to us over here and that is "Lige" Jones, the backbone. I expect, of the "Farmers Hardware" business. He is a jolly good fellow and knows exactly how to make a dime become a dollar and not wait all day about it. I sorter think he has some extension building plans for South Clanton in his head. You just watch out.

You ever hear of any ice being cotton? I never did, but we have already had nine months winter this time and the boys will have to make their cotton crop in short order to get it over in three months more.

In fifty years experience I never knew the political situation to get in such a palpable mess as it is right now. The Democratic party has always been the only party that cut any ice in the South during my entire life, but now the goblins have certainly got it and and where are we at? It is just remarkable to me to meet the great numbers of people who promptly tell you they "are going always to vote for the man in the future." They owe no loyalty to any party now. That sounds funny to a man with my years of experience, but I don't hardly know but what it is as good a plan as any now. I love and appreciate my freedom and the "Bosses" can go too far me.

I want to congratulate you on the handsome enlargement of your paper. The first copy was fine and I hope to see you climb right on to the top.

After A Long, Strenuous Day Try An "Emergency" Cleansing

APPLY make-up only to a scrupulously clean skin. This will prevent your pores becoming clogged, and will help you to keep your skin fine-textured. But if you are in town all day shopping or working, and then have an engagement for dinner, you probably will say to yourself, "That cleansing rule is all very well sometimes. Yet what can I do when I haven't the time or opportunity to give my skin a thorough cleansing?"

Occasionally it is impossible to cleanse your face thoroughly, and you must be content with the next best thing—an "emergency cleansing." In the morning carry with you a small bottle of skin freshener, and a few pads of cotton. Carefully wrap cleansing tissues around the bottle to keep it from breaking.

For your emergency cleansing, saturate a small piece of cotton with skin freshener and whisk it up over your neck and face. This will remove the dust and excess oil that have collected during the day, and will leave your face feeling cool and refreshed. Then smooth a little dry or cream rouge on your cheeks, and apply a bit of lipstick to your lips. And last, lightly dust your neck and face with powder, but do not rub it in. Rubbing only makes face powder cake, and gives your skin that not-quite-clean appearance we all want to avoid.

Too much trouble? Of course not, for I believe even a plain woman who always looks immaculate makes a better impression than one who is beautiful, but untidy. There is a pleasant element of surprise about someone who preserves an air of freshness and perfection after a long, tiring day that would leave most women wilted-looking.

Of course this "emergency cleansing" never should take the place of your daily basic cleansing. Your face and neck should be thoroughly cleansed at least once daily in this way: Beginning at the base of your neck, spread a generous coating of cleansing cream up over every portion of your neck and face with your cushioned-finger tips.

Let the cream remain on your skin for a minute or two, and then again working up from the base of your neck, wipe away the cream with soft, absorbent cleansing tissues. Never use towels to remove cream, for even the finest towel is not as soft as cleansing tissues, and the week's laundry problem certainly is no small item if towels are used in place of cleansing tissues.

After wiping away the cleansing cream, saturate pads of cotton with skin freshener, and wipe those damp pads up over your face and neck to remove every remaining trace of cream. This will leave your skin really clean.

MR. SALE SUGGESTS PLAINER ELECTRIC BILLS AS OUR NEED

New York, June 21.—Well, sir, if our delegates to the big radio and electric light conference in Berlin are sign'g a treaty, like our London naval delegates signed. I hope they do a good job.

Right off the bat they ought to make out electric light bills so folks can understand them. You take an electric light bill. It don't say on there that you have used so many quarts or gallons or pounds or bushels of electricity. It says your meter shows a certain number of watts. You don't know what a watt is and the bill collector who comes out to shut the lights off don't know what a watt is. Fact of the matter is don't anybody know. That's why they call it a watt. It's just an abbreviation for "watt is it?" And you take the radio. The announcer says: "We have been broadcastin' on so many kilocycles." What is a kilocycle? Sometimes when there is a lot of static I feel like hollerin' back at the announcer: "Don't you mean motorcycles?"

News In Brief

The 1930 census indicates that the City of New York has a population of 6,700,000.

Electrified farms in the United States increased from 460,000 to 558,000 during 1929, or by 21.5 per cent. This is the largest increase ever recorded for a year.

Despite an increase in population a declining birth rate is cutting down school registrations. There were 4,320,000 in the first grade in 1920, while in 1926, with a population increase of 10 per cent, there were less than 4,000,000.

Close to 75 per cent of all American women still make jams and jellies. A recent survey for General Foods shows that 88 per cent of all farm women, 78 per cent of village women, and 45 per cent of large city women make homemade jams.

The winter of 1929-30 was the most healthful on record in the United States and Canada, according to the current statistical bulletin of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, which reports also that since the influenza epidemic of 1918 the mortality rate at every season has shown a marked decrease.

Approximately 40 per cent, or $325,000,000 worth of the milk sold in the United States in 1928 was marketed by fluid-milk cooperative marketing associations, according to Hutzler Metzger, agricultural economist, in a report of a survey of the milk industry, just issued by the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

WHAT THE WELL DRESSED AUTOMOBILE WILL WEAR

What the well dressed automobile will wear in the way of tires has come to be one of the problems of the modern motorists according to Dief's Service Station, local Goodyear dealer.

"Many years of careful research and experiment have been devoted to bringing the wearing qualities of auto tires up to the highest point of perfection," says Mr. Diefenderfer.

"The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., a pioneer in this research work, also appointed itself to the task of adding attractiveness as well as durability and performance to its passenger car casings.

"The Goodyear Double Eagle, the sturdiest and handsomest of all, was the first of a series of 'dress tires' now available. This tire circumscribed with two narrow silver stripes, is to the conservatively decorated automobile what patent leather oxfords are to the dress suit. Neat, attractive and appropriate, but not flashy or conspicuous.

"The Heavy Duty Balloon, is the sports shoe of the lot. As its name implies it is thick and sturdy with one narrow silver stripe around its sidewalls.

"The diamond shaped tread buttons of this husky casing are carried down the sidewalls in a neat cubist pattern, reaching to the silver striping, this design setting off the whole in a neat reproduction of the Goodyear house flag in blue and gold.

"The trend toward improved appearance is being followed in the manufacture of all Goodyear's passenger car casings. The discriminating motorist, whether he purchases a low-priced 'four' or a high-priced 'sixteen' demands that his vehicle be shod in style."

Man Accused As Slayer Returned

Gadsden, Ala., June 22.—Thad Lowery, 28, charged with murder in connection with the fatal shooting of J. D. Davis, 20, at Cedar Bluff in August, 1927, has been brought from Oklahoma by Sheriff J. W. Mitchell and lodged in Cherokee County jail, according to local police.

Lowery, officers said, has been serving time in a penitentiary at McAlester, Okla., for the past two years.

Following the death of Davis, Lowery disappeared, police said, and was the object of a nation-wide search for a year. The government furnished finger prints from Lowery's army records, which were used to identify the man, police said.

Location of the Refrigerator

Good Location for Refrigerator with Outside Door for Iceing.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The illustration shows an excellent location for a refrigerator with an iceing door opening to the back entry. This refrigerator can be filled without having the ice man come into the kitchen, and it is close to the entrance door so that milk, butter, lettuce and other foods kept in the icebox can be put away with a minimum of trouble and lost time. The position of the refrigerator was selected not only with respect to ready storage of foods and convenient iceing, but because it is in the right relation to other work centers in this kitchen.

The entry was at the northwest corner of the room. Following around from left to right, the kitchen cabinet of food preparation center comes next on the west wall; at the south end there is a sink with double drainboards, placed below a window for good lighting, with a dish closet at right angles to it. In the southeast corner of the room, this dish cupboard is of the two-way type or pass closet type in the connecting wall between the kitchen and dining room. It is so located that dishes washed at the sink can be put away without any extra steps, thus making a compact clearing away and dishwashing center. The stove is on the fourth wall, next to the two-way closet and only a step from the sink, so that pans which have to be filled with water are easily transferred to the stove or cooking center, and from the stove to the service counter of the two-way closet. To wear hose that are too short or to fasten supporters too tightly both shorten the life of silk stockings.

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

"Well," said one ostrich to another, "I'll tell you what I'll do."

"If you don't mind my being queer, which is really the way you are queer, too, I'd like you to be my mate."

"I would never leave you. I am four years old, which is the right time for a young ostrich to think of getting himself a mate, and I would judge you were about that age, too."

"Possibly a little younger," Mr. Ostrich added politely.

The second ostrich moved her head coyly to one side—that is—coyly as an ostrich could, and said:

"I'd love to be your mate. And I will always be your mate, just as you will always be mine."

"We are queer—all of the ostrich family—every ostrich on this great ostrich farm—every ostrich everywhere."

Flavor of Lamb Not Affected by Fell

The fell is the thin papery outer covering on the lamb carcass. Although recipes frequently advise that it be removed before cooking, it is now believed, says the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture, that flavor is not affected by the fell. Leg of lamb keeps its shape better if cooked with the fell, but shoulder, saddle, and chops are improved by its removal. Unless a roast from which the fell has been removed is rubbed well with flour, it will require longer to cook than a piece with the fell undisturbed.

"Yes, go on," said Mrs. Ostrich, "this is very interesting."

"We are all queer," continued Mr. Ostrich, "because we are feathered like birds and yet we cannot fly."

"We can run instead, and we are good runners."

"But it's queer to be dressed like a bird and act like an animal."

"It is queer," said Mrs. Ostrich, "but I don't mind such queerness."

"We Are Queer."

"Not in the least," said Mr. Ostrich. "I don't suppose any ostrich minds."

"We're all so used to such queerness."

"They say," Mrs. Ostrich remarked, "that some ostriches make any amount of money for their owners."

"I suppose you were first plucked when you were nine months old and when you were about six feet in height."

"You're right, Mrs. Ostrich, and I was put in a little yard and my feathers which were all ready were clipped off."

"Well I, for one, am glad that they make use of our feathers, for we're well treated on this farm."

"Oh yes," said Mrs. Ostrich, "it's fine to be so useful and to decorate the hats of beautiful ladies."

"It's fine," said Mr. Ostrich, "and I approve of it, for it never hurts us in the least bit to have our feathers properly plucked."

"It gives no pain and in no way does it hurt us. But some ladies," and Mr. Ostrich looked very sad, "care so much about all kinds of feathers that they will even wear the feathers of little birds which have to be killed, and of some mother birds which have to be killed just when the little ones are needing her so much."

"I can't believe it," gasped Mrs. Ostrich. "When they can have feathers from creatures such as ourselves where it won't hurt, they should not take decorations where it means the lives of birds."

FRUIT PUNCH IS DELICIOUS

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

About fifty people can be served with punch made from the following recipe. While strawberries are in season, it is a splendid beverage for festivals, school and church socials, parties or a wedding. The proportions have been tested by the bureau of home economics and found to result in a very satisfactory blend of fruit flavor. One secret of making any punch evenly sweet is to prepare a sirup from the sugar and water instead of using plain sugar, which often remains undissolved at the bottom of the punch bowl.

- | | |
|---|--|
| 4 cups sugar | 2 quarts freshly made strong tea |
| 3 cups water | 2 dozen lemons |
| 2 dozen oranges | 1/2 tsp. salt |
| 2 quarts strawberry juice, bottled, or 2 quarts crushed fresh fruit | 1 quart ginger ale or carbonated water |

Roll the sugar and water together to make a heavy sirup, and cool. Squeeze the oranges and lemons and squeeze out the juice. Barely cover the fruit skins with water, let stand for an hour or longer, pour off the water and add to the fruit juice. Add the other fruits and the tea. Just before serving add chopped ice, the ginger ale or carbonated water, and if the punch is too strong, ice water in small quantities until the punch is the flavor desired.

Oh! it's a lesson well worth taking to heart. Why be homely when prettiness is so attainable these days. Beauty doctors and dress psychology call to action! Away with homeliness—let chic, charm and attractiveness reign in its stead.

Importance of Good Posture

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Good posture throughout her active day is a matter of more importance to the homemaker than she may realize. It makes all the difference between weariness and freshness when her work is done. Faulty ways of standing and sitting cause much unnecessary fatigue, backache, tired feet, and a general feeling of slump which must be quite out of proportion to the amount of work done. If bad posture becomes habitual the spine may be affected, the shoulders become "round," the ankles may have a tendency to "run over," or other defects may develop. Sometimes these are sufficiently serious to cause displacement or cramping of internal organs leading to many physical ailments.

It is fairly easy to catch oneself stooping unnecessarily over the sink, the kitchen table, the wash tub, or ironing board. Sometimes a little adjustment in the height of these working surfaces is what is needed. Good sitting posture is often neglected because a natural tendency to relax in a chair if one is already somewhat tired. Putting the feet squarely on the floor and sitting with the base of the spine well back, helps to throw other parts of the body into good sitting position.

Perhaps the least noticeable and most frequent tendency to slump the shoulders and chest and thrust the hips out of place occurs when one is doing work that requires continuous standing, sweeping or mopping, cooking at the stove, and so on. When one is making some dish which must be "stirred constantly," it is easy to forget about posture and allow the body to sag.

The illustration, taken by the United States Department of Agriculture

Stand Properly When Working at Stove.

In a Massachusetts farm kitchen shows just how to stand properly when busy at the stove. The chest is high, the head erect and the back straight; the worker is standing squarely on both feet, which, incidentally, are clad in well-fitting, low-heeled shoes in good repair. The stove surface is at a good height for this homemaker.

Sunday School Lesson

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Minister of Faculty, Moody Bible Institute, Chicago. (© 1930, Western Newspaper Union.)

Lesson for June 29

REVIEW: THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM CONTINUED

GOLDEN TEXT—Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Making Jesus Known.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Believing in Jesus.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Shall I do with Jesus?

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Meaning of Christian Discipleship.

The plan of review must always be determined by the teacher in the light of the grade of the school and the aptitudes of the pupils. For similar adult classes the best method will be to recall that all the lessons of the quarter are from the book of Matthew which has as its theme Jesus Christ, the Messiah, King, and His Kingdom, and to present each lesson in its relation to this central purpose. The lessons have a threefold unity, namely, one book, one theme, one person. Lesson for April 6. To prepare the disciples for the dark hour of the cross Jesus sought to lead them to a clear apprehension of His purpose and mission. After Peter's confession of Him as the Messiah, Jesus showed to the disciples that He must come into the place of triumph through the tragedy of the cross.

Lesson for April 13. The greatest in the kingdom are those who possess childlike humility. The condition of entrance into the kingdom is true conversion, or birth from above.

Lesson for April 20. In this lesson we have divine instruction as to how to have in case of ill-treatment. Those who are Christlike shall suffer persecution. Those who have entered the kingdom by birth from above—those who have received forgiveness from God—will forgive their fellows.

Lesson for April 27. Riches are deceitful. Possessors thereof are prone to put their trust in them. It is most difficult for those who are rich to give place to spiritual things. Lesson for May 4. Those who would be greatest in the kingdom should like Christ the King, take the place of self-abasement. In love, Christ gave Himself for others. He substituted "the greatness of love for the love of greatness."

Lesson for May 11. To the nation which rejected Jesus as King and endeavoring to kill Him, at the appointed time, in the councils of God He officially presented Himself as King, in fulfillment of prophecy.

Lesson for May 18. Under the name of a marriage, Jesus set forth the privileges and benefits of the kingdom. He used marriage, the highest ideal of love and friendship known to man, to show the benefits of the kingdom.

Lesson for May 25. In the Olivet discourse Jesus outlined the events in the world to take place in the interval between His crucifixion and His second coming. The parable of the ten virgins shows the right behavior of believers in this present age in view of the coming of the Lord.

Lesson for June 1. By talents meant whatever faculties and powers one possesses as God's gifts, such as physical strength, reason, knowledge, speech, song, or money. All these should be employed so as to honor God who gave them. A reckoning time is coming when account shall be rendered for their use. This will be Christ's second coming.

Lesson for June 8. Mary of Bethany, because of her keen apprehension, saw that the Lord's body would be broken and that His precious life would be laid out at a time when no one could lovingly minister to Him. She therefore anointed Him as against that dread day. When the disciples criticized her act, she was defended by Jesus.

Lesson for June 15—Jesus did not die as a martyr or as an example, but to make an atonement for man's sin. The supreme value of the lessons for the quarter centers in the cross. Teachers, it is not a matter of getting your children to learn the lessons of a great teacher, but to induce them to have faith in Christ's sacrificial death.

Lesson for June 22. The resurrection of Jesus demonstrated His Messiahship and deity. The command of Jesus to preach the gospel in all the world is backed by His resurrection power.

The Oil of Joy

Christianship wants nothing so much in the world as sunny people, and the old are hungrier for love than for bread, and the oil of joy is very cheap, and if you can help the poor on with the garment of praise, it will be better for them than blankets—Henry Drummond.

A Moral Pivot

The Hindu professor of modern history in a South India college said to me: "My study of modern history has shown me that there is a Moral Pivot in the world today, and that the best life of both East and West is more and more revolving about that center—that Moral Pivoting is the pivot of Jesus Christ."—E. Stanley Jones.

Foods from Other Countries

By NELLIE MAXWELL

If you are busy being right. You'd find yourself too busy quite to criticize your neighbor long. Because he's busy doing wrong.

—Rebecca Foreman

As America has been called the melting pot of the world, so are we cosmopolitan in our national fare. It is not strange, as our foods, drinks, condiments and fruits come from all parts of the globe.

By association with foreign people, travel and reading, we are becoming international in our recipes as we have been with our forks. At our breakfast tables we use tea from China or India, coffee from South America, and fruit from the West Indies.

With the increasing transportation facilities, we will be able to enjoy many of the perishable fruits that have never been shipped to northern points in America.

Panama Salad.—Place a slice of pineapple on a bed of lettuce, cover with alternate segments of grapefruit and orange, using six slices of pineapple, one grapefruit and two oranges. Fill the cavity in the center with a pitted date that has been stuffed with cream cheese, which has been softened to a paste with the juices of the fruits.

Porto Rican Sandwiches.—Cut slices of pineapples into halves, making them half their original thickness. Split canned pineapples into halves and drain between absorbent paper. Spread thin slices of bread—cut into rounds of the same size as the pineapple—with softened butter. Cover one round with a layer of mayonnaise, on a second place a slice of pineapple and a round of pineapple.

No one enjoys balancing a plate on an unsteady knee while helping one's self to a dish and holding a cup of hot liquid in the other hand. The host and hostess who think of the comfort of their guests will provide ample space for the placing of a plate and cup. The enjoyment of good food can be entirely spoiled by the too informal and careless manner of serving. A convenient spot should be provided for each guest and a minimum amount of equipment, for there are few sleight-of-hand performers who care to juggle a plate and cup of hot coffee.

To most of us there is a real sense of relaxation and enjoyment in meeting around the fire a few congenial friends, or in summer weather a porch or garden is equally delightful. Try to serve such food as will be easily handled without the discomfort of dipping dishes. The meat if hot should be served in such a manner as to be eaten easily, the salad compact enough to stay in shape. Accessories like pickles, olives or celery should be arranged on one plate. If cheese cannot be dispensed with put it into the stalks of tender celery, where it may be nicely handled.

If hot rolls are served, butter them—for butter and knives make another burden. For dessert loaves, sponge cake, or chilled fruit and cakes of different kinds will be enjoyed.

The tea cart is one of the helpful aids in serving such a supper. Have the plates, cups, the hot dish, whatever is served in casserole, hot toast ready to serve with the hot meat dish and the tea or coffee equipment as well as the silver to be used, all on the top shelf. If the tea cart has leaves so much the better for serving. On the lower shelf place the dessert plates and serving dish or sherbet cups.

With a small table placed for the serving of each two or three guests everybody will be comfortable.

As the Sunday dinner has been a hearty one, the supper should be food tasty but not too heavy.

When Texas Became State

Texas won her independence from Mexico and became known as the Republic of Texas in 1836. In the year immediately following there were repeated invasions and massacre by the Mexicans, who never abandoned their claims to the Texas territory. They advanced three times as far as San Antonio, but in each case were repelled. Statehood was offered to Texas, but the question of annexation brought up the difficulties of the slave question, which became the national issue of the Polk campaign. However, he won the Presidency by favoring the annexation of Texas. Before he took the oath of office, congress passed a joint resolution again offering statehood to Texas, which she accepted, and the territory became a part of the United States in 1845.

Boys Now Respect Empty Cans After Blast From Match

Alexander City, Ala., June 22.—Two young men here have a new and definite respect for empty cans, especially if said cans once contained gasoline. The can that introduced this respect lay in Howard Carpenter's garage Saturday. Howard and Julian Rawls, a neighbor boy, found it and struck a match to see if there was anything in it. There was.

A blast that rocked the community, broke and burned Julian's arm, burned Howard's hair most all away, and transformed the garage into a blazing torch resulted.

The Fire Department made short work of the fire. Both boys were reported out of danger at the hospital late Sunday.

Rooster Is Called In Court To Affix Blame In Robbery

Youngstown, Ohio, June 22.—Had "Primo" been an illiterate rooster, Frank Miller, 39, might be free instead of confined to a cell in Mahoning County jail. But having had an education, "Primo" still retains his head and his position of rank among the fowls of W. L. Shively.

The bird's ownership was the subject of recent dispute between Miller and Shively, who took his contentions to court. Miller had the rooster and Shively only the claim. The court was nonplussed in the absence of witnesses to the alleged theft.

Finally, Deputy Sheriff Sorvillo subpoenaed the bird. "Primo" perched himself erectly on the arm of a court chair, peering for a moment at the defendant without a trace of recognition. Then he looked at the plaintiff.

"Primo! Primo!" called out Deputy Sorvillo.

"Primo" launched himself at the feet of Shively, flapped his wings and crowed lustily.

"I'll plead guilty," weakly said Miller. "Ninety days," said the judge.

"Cock-a-doodle-doo," said "Primo."

Press Institute Is To Meet At Auburn

Dr. Knapp said a splendid program is being arranged and a large attendance expected. The institute will be conducted under the auspices of the Alabama Press Association and the Alabama Polytechnic Institute. The committee in charge is composed of Mr. Darnall; N. C. Cady, of Birmingham, and P. O. Davis, of Auburn.

Quick Work Needed To Control Webworm

Auburn, Ala., June 26.—Quick action on the part of tree owners is necessary if attacks of the fall webworm, known ravager of 120 trees and shrubs, are to be stopped, according to Prof. J. M. Robinson, head of the department of entomology and zoology of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute. He said that the first generation of the fall webworm is now devouring the leaves of pecan, forest, and shade trees. Control is not difficult, he said.

The larvae, or the stage of the insect which does the damage, live in groups and spin a web ahead of where they feed on the leaves, he explained in describing the method of attack. The webs or tents are constructed of silk secreted by the larvae. As the insects eat the leaves surrounded by the web more web is developed. The process continues until sometimes small trees are completely surrounded and defoliated. On large trees many colonies are often established, resulting in complete defoliation.

"The first generation of the larvae are usually on leaves of the lower limbs," Professor Robinson said, "and should be removed and mashed. Another measure of control is to burn the webs with torches."

The entomologist warned that if the first generation is not destroyed the second generation will appear in August and may completely destroy the leaves of the trees. There are three generations and the third lives over the winter, he added.

Arsenical sprays are not effective against this insect on account of the web which acts as a protective covering, he continued.

licit the vote and influence of the people of Chilton County, in my race for said office.

Prune Shrubs When Blooming Is Over

Auburn, Ala., June 26.—Just after they have finished blooming is the best time to prune flowering shrubs, says Sam F. Brewster, extension landscape specialist of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute. He emphasized that it is important to know the season of bloom of the plant to be pruned.

"Early-flowering shrubs such as bridle wreath, vanhouttei spirea, thunberg spirea, azalea, redbud, dogwood, privets, oleander, mock-orange, flowering almond, weigela, and so forth, should have the dead blossoms cut off," Mr. Brewster continued. "In addition, the dead wood should be pruned from the center of the plant. This keeps the bush open to light and air. Long, weak branches should be shortened and suckers should be removed. On some plants, as the privets and boxwoods, prune to bring the plant to any desired form."

"Late-flowering shrubs such as abelia beautyberry, althea, crapemyrtle, and so forth, should be pruned when the plant is dormant."

"The reason for the different times of pruning is because some plants bear their flowers on last year's wood while other plants bear their flowers on present year's growth," he explained. "Those plants that bloom early should be pruned when they are through blooming in order that they may grow new woods before winter. Plants that do not bloom until late bear flowers on present year's wood and should not be pruned until winter. If that way the plant will develop a strong new growth and will be covered with flowers."

A boar used as a sire should not be discarded until the growing and feeding qualities of his progeny are determined by a test in the feed lot. Sires of superior quality are none too numerous and many a valuable sire that should have been retained in the herd has been sent to the block.

Pine timber is so useful that pine trees often make a profitable crop now, according to the Forest Service. Some land on almost every farm, and large areas of cut-over land in the South, are best suited to timber growing and will return more profit from timber than from anything else.

Sheep seldom make profitable use of grain when good grazing is available. One hundred pounds of grain in a year for one ewe and her lambs is usually the maximum that can be fed profitably. Under some conditions, flocks keep in good condition and lambs may be marketed without any grain.

I have long entertained the opinion that picture and crossword puzzle contests had immense value in developing the brain. After studying the results of the picture puzzle contest just completed by the Bond Electric Corporation of Jersey City, N. J., I am convinced more than ever of the value of these "brain teasers."

This contest dealt entirely with the flashlights, batteries and tubes, and other electrical products of the corporation. Each contestant had to study the pictures and determine just what business slogan was concealed therein.

More than 350,000 people, attracted by the $10,000 in prizes offered by the electrical corporation, tried their ingenuity at solving the six puzzles. And the judges were hard pressed to determine the winners, so great was the analytical ability and deductive powers displayed by the thousands who sent in their answers. Comparing these answers with the 250,000 sent in last year to the slogan contest conducted by the Bond Corporation, the answers this year displayed greater deductive ability.

And this contest attracted people from all walks of life---doctors, lawyers, dentists, housewives, railroad workers, even high school students. Proving that puzzle contests are not limited in

Confiding Secrets Of Dress, A Woman's Job

Do women choose their clothes to please men or merely to compete with other women?

This is a debatable question. Men who try to answer it in mixed company are likely to find themselves involved in difficulties. In fact, the subject of women's fashions is dangerous ground for any man.

This is why the Chilton County News is running the articles on women's fashions written by Mrs. Julia Bottomley, an authority on dress and style, whose advice is calculated to make its appeal to the woman who wishes to appear well dressed without spending too much time or money to that end.

Descriptions of freak models will not be found in Mrs. Bottomley's articles. She attempts only to depict what combinations of color, materials and style will prove most satisfactory with regard to individual taste and economy.

"In writing these fashion articles," Mrs. Bottomley says, "I try to picture myself as the woman in a small community who is seeking to dress herself to the best of her ability. I know the problems confronting this woman because I used to live in a small community myself."

Before Mrs. Bottomley began to put her knowledge into print she ran a millinery and dress-making shop in Colorado, and it was here that she gained the viewpoint from which she writes. She makes due allowance for costs, and when she says that a certain piece of material will cost one dollar per yard it means that it will probably cost less in most communities.

The illustrations which accompany her articles are authentic and are photographed under her direct supervision. By personal visits to the fashion centers of New York and Chicago she is enabled to keep in constant touch with the newest modes. From the great array of styles created and displayed in these places she chooses those which experience tells her will be most acceptable to the women for whom she writes.

Women readers, we believe, will be glad to know these things about Mrs. Bottomley. The material she describes can be purchased in Clanton from advertisers in the News.

their attraction to any particular age or walk in life.

I am sure there is not a more pleasant or educational way in which to spend spare time than in endeavoring to solve puzzles of the type offered by the Bond Electrical Corporation. Their puzzles dealt with the products of the corporation, with which everybody is familiar, such as flashlights, batteries, radio tubes and the like. Those who tried solving them were compelled to use portions of their brain that otherwise would have clearer outlook on life in general.

It is interesting to note that newspaper advertising played an important part in attracting the 350,000 contestants. "Newspaper advertising is the backbone of American industry," Bertram C. Plante, President of the Bond Electric Corporation told me. "Without newspaper advertising it would be impossible to attract, in so direct a manner, the attention of the consumer."

Mrs. Susan Arnold of Leagrave, England, lost her shoe in the mud on the main street and is suing the village board.

"I HAVE taken Black-Draught all my life, whenever in need of a medicine for constipation," says Mrs. G. C. Burns, of Buna, Texas. "My mother and father used it in their home for years, and I was raised to think of it as the first thing if I had a headache or was constipated."

"At one time I had indigestion real bad. I was all out of sorts; my skin was sallow, and I had gas pains. After a course of Black-Draught, I got all right. I have given Black-Draught to my children, whenever they needed a medicine of the kind."

SAVE MONEY BY READING

Did it ever occur to you that it is possible to make your county paper pay you more in a year, than the amount you pay for your subscription? Never a week passes that the News doesn't carry ads from local merchants who are telling the people of the county of some special offer they are making on some item most everyone uses.

By watching these ads and taking advantage of the offers from local merchants, one will be able to save many times more in one year than a year's subscription costs for the News. The News also gives to its readers each week, features that, should one attempt to purchase them in book form, they would cost much more than a subscription to the paper. Read the ads in the News each week, and see for yourself that those merchants who advertise really want and appreciate your business. If your subscription to the News is not paid up, see to it at once, as it is only $1.50 per year.

While everyone is apparently in a rush and eager to take in as many things as possible during the day in the way of amusements, thought should be given to safety, and the thought of "Better Be Safe Than Sorry," should be kept in mind, so that the day may be spent in fun and recreation, without bringing sorrow to some family through the carelessness or thoughtfulness of some person in search of a good time.

Many days of frolic end in sorrow, and although this is not intended to take on a joy-killing attitude, but is intended to remind the people that they can enjoy the day tomorrow, and still be careful.

THE TIDE RETURNS

The tide goes out, but it comes in again. The pendulum swings, far to one side. But it swings back again. Times become "hard" but they turn again to "good times."

As a matter of fact, times are always good to the good business man. Very often it pays to be so dumb you don't know when you're licked. If you don't know you're licked, you aren't.

Right now the man is dumb indeed, as well as deaf and blind, who cannot see that opportunities are springing up afresh all around us. Right now is the time to hit the line hard. There is business. Go after it! Tell the world, and you'll sell the world. Quit arguing whether advertising pays. Get busy and do a lot of it, and then you'll know it does.—MS.

Compliments, Thos. L. Hackett, District Manager, Nehi Bottling Co.

On January 1, 1930, many patriots celebrated the one hundred and ninety-fifth anniversary of the birth of Paul Revere, Revolutionary war hero, who has been immortalized in song and story. Many people do not know that even before his historic ride in 1775 the hero had gained a reputation of being one of the finest silversmiths of the time. Examples of his handicraft are greatly prized by museums and public collections and prove that Revere's name would have lived in the world of art without the fame he added to it.

Senator Hugo Black Says Republicans Have Failed.

In his message to the Democrats of Alabama, Senator Hugo Black with gloves off, takes to task the republican party. In this message, which was given to the Democrats last month, Senator Black had the following to say:

"It is an appropriate time for Alabama democracy to prepare to take its part in the 1930 political struggles. Republican control has impoverished the farmers of the nation; bankrupted business; and filled the streets and highways of the United States with millions seeking employment. This same republican party has permitted monopoly to stalk greedily throughout the country, and grow rich and inflated on the hard-earned money of the masses of our people.

"There has never been a time in American history when special privilege and selfish, predatory interests had such complete domination of our government. With colossal wealth in the hands of a few mighty-manipulators, while multitudes are in want, it is time to wrest our government from the hands of the party of selfishness, plutocracy and greed.

"This country has tried the republican party, and found it wanting. It has suffered too much from so-called 'Hoover prosperity.'

"It is time to restore the government to the hands of the democratic party which is the party of the people. To that end we must work. The time to start is now.

"That your meeting may arouse the old fighting spirit of democracy is my wish. Forgetting the differences of the past, let us look to the future with hope. In this great battle for equal economic justice to all, let us remember that the democratic party for more than a century has championed the cause of the masses of the American people. This party is their party. Their fight against republican greed and special privilege can only be successfully waged by the party of Jefferson, Cleveland, Jackson and Wilson.

The Immortal Fifty-Six

Fifty-six members of the Continental Congress signed the Declaration of Independence after its adoption on July 3, 1776, and of these daring patriots it has been said that "not one of the signers ever fell from the high estate to which that great act had elevated him."

Among the 56 were many of the nation's great men in the early history of the United States. Two of them, Adams and Jefferson, reached the presidency. Benjamin Harrison became the father of one President and the great-grandfather of another. The bold signature of John Hancock, who signed first as President of the Congress, is the most conspicuous feature of the original document. Other exceptionally prominent signers were Benjamin Franklin, Robert Morris, Dr. Benjamin Rush, Samuel Adams, Richard Henry Lee, and Charles Carroll. Carroll was the last survivor and lived 60 years after the adoption of the Declaration, reaching the age of 95.

The signers included 34 lawyers, 13 farmers, nine merchants, five physicians, two mechanics, one clergyman, one mason, and one surveyor. All except eight were born on American soil.

To the wisdom, courage and patriotism of these immortal 56, who declared our independence and made heroic sacrifices in its behalf, the existence of the nation is largely due. They will ever be held in grateful remembrance.

Saving Young Lives

One of the few bright spots in the traffic situation is the condition respecting children, says a report of the Third Annual Conference on Street and Highway Safety.

At a time when the accident toll among adults is constantly rising, the nation's children are demonstrating that they have the intelligence, stamina and capacity for understanding the laws of safety that enables them to accommodate themselves to the conditions of a more hazardous world.

Six years ago, it is said, the value of teaching safety in the schools was problematical. Today it has been established beyond doubt that such teaching is a tremendous influence in the preservation of life.

According to statistics issued by the Bureau of the Census, if accidental fatalities to children had increased during the last seven years at the same rate as accidental fatalities to adults, there would have been over 3,000 children killed in traffic accidents last year, and 3,000 more killed in other kinds of accidents, who are now living. Figures covering the last three years show a large increase in motor fatalities for adults, a smaller increase for children of pre-school age, and a very important decrease for children of school age.

This does not mean that we have solved the problem of accidents to children. Fine work has been done and is being done; still finer and more complete work should be done. Every school in America should give its pupils the teaching that will enable them to safely meet the hazards of daily life.

Another Reason for Advertising

The inventor who makes a mouse trap that he thinks everybody will buy will have to give up the plebian idea that customers will beat a path to a hidden retreat to buy his invention. This is a highly competitive age and everything proves that it is the man who advertises in his home paper and uses modern methods of business who is the white-haired favorite who's note gets the "O. K." at the bank.

"Clantonians, Let's Talk Clanton."

"ROUND TOWN"

--by Doug

Opinions expressed in this column by this writer have no connection with the general policies of this paper. Nothing wholly those of the writer, in the manner from the Scripps.

With the weather like it is, radioing is something that a high-tempered person should stay away from. During the past day or so I haven't been able to get anything but static, but I think I have found the solution, and maybe it lies in those pigtail-making machines that those permanent wavers bring to Clanton for a day or so, and play havoc with our young ladies' hair, then they are gone. Why can't the women folks here learn to trade at home, and stop thinking that because something is new, that it is the best.

But that's a woman's way. I'll bet if she had a dozen hats, each bought a day apart, she would wear the last one she bought, just because it was the newest.

A bunch of our fellows took a trip down to Miami (or My-aints) last week and I have given them all the once over since they got back, and they seem to be the same. Reuben Lowe got all wet while he was there, but don't misunderstand me, he took a dip in the broad Atlantic. Foster Miller was in the party too, and seems as if he was worried on the return trip about getting his Scotch(man) back home alive and in good shape. The others didn't seem to worry about it, but maybe they had made different arrangements about their negotiations on the subject of the Wets and Dries.

A little occurrence occurred the other night while I was hanging around the office of the C. G. N., which made me wonder if that certain young lady and her steady have had a falling out, and I am still wondering, because I have no intentions of trying to find out. Funny how one can lose interest in a person.

Two whole weeks now, and not a single fire. That's doing better. But the Volunteer Firemen are still ready to do their bit when one does crop out. That some people do appreciate the efforts of our firemen was shown at their meeting the other night, when they were treated to an ice cream supper and Mr. Lande made them a nice gift of something. I couldn't find out what it was, but they said they sure appreciated it. And for the like of me I can't understand why some folks here are so ready to knock our fire department, and some of the officials who took the responsibility upon themselves to give to the town some real fire fighting equipment. Can you imagine what would have happened during our recent fires, if the equipment was the same as we have had to use for many years—those push and pull carts?

"Clantonians, Let's Talk Clanton."

Well, I am going to play safe tomorrow and let the rest of you folks have the town. I don't want to get hurt in the rush when some of the candidates begin to speak at the high school. Wonder how the Miller Meeting turned out at the courthouse Monday night. Hope nobody got hurt in the courthouse.

When I started writing this column for the C. G. N., I had a consultation with myself and we decided we wouldn't enter into any politics, because we don't know much about that, but I think I am going to have to dabble just a little in it now and then, because there is so much talk about it. Heard the other day that Charlie McCall was just practicing now with his loud speakers, because after the election he was going out on the road and sell Indian herbs. Wonder what Miller is going to do. He might get in with Charlie and be his comedian so as to draw a crowd.

"Clantonians, Let's Talk Clanton."

I think they should have waited for awhile to take the census of Clanton, because it would have shown more by this time, at the rate of births around these parts. Jobs are getting scarcer and the population is increasing, and there's no telling what will happen next. They are even making smaller automobiles now, but I don't know whether that has any connection with this or not.

There are several young ladies in Clanton that I had picked out as brides-to-be during June, but so far neither one of the four have taken onto themselves a husband. Of course I had him singled out too. This situation of marriages, births, etc., is becoming alarming. All this together with Hoover Prosperity is bound to end in something—for better, of course, because it can't be much worse. But I shouldn't kick, I've still got my shirt on, getting three meals a day, and a good place to take a bath when I want it.

Had a dream the other night about the "road hog" starting through Clanton on a Saturday afternoon. When he started through the highway, which is Seventh Street, he threw up his hands and turned the other way. The street was too crowded with trucks and cars parking out in the street. Just an ordinary motorist would do what the road hog did in that case, when he saw how the bread and transfer trucks bring their goods to Clanton and park out in the street to deliver them, and imposing on our traffic rules and our cops. It's just too bad, they can't do something about that.

Another large crowd in town Saturday. No wonder that folks passing through our town think we have a big, growing little city. Let's keep them thinking that. Well, anyway, it is true to a certain extent. And hot, I would roughly estimate that something like twenty-two million gallons of water were consumed here Saturday by thirty people, including myself. I drank so much water Saturday that by Saturday night when I took my bath in the bath tub, I just decided I had had a thorough washing, on the interior and exterior.

Evan Parrish reminded me of that "Man from the South" the other day. He had a big cigar in his mouth, which characterizes "the Man from the South."

violators by prohibiting them from being candidates for state offices in the coming primary. This is proper. Regularity in the party is essential to its life.

Education

"Children are an heritage of the Lord," Psalm 127:3. They are the future hope of Alabama. They must be educated. It is a necessity; Alabama must do its part. We should press forward and take no backward step in this great work.

"If the Legislature should find, without increasing the present tax rate, sufficient funds to spare to purchase the school books for each child in Alabama and pass a bill to that effect, then it should be approved by the Governor. School books should be furnished free to the children when the State is able to do so. This matter will have to be considered by the Legislature in a reasonable way in connection with all of the other necessary expenses of the government. There are hundreds of thousands of children in Alabama. The books are expensive, and it would take millions of dollars annually to purchase, distribute and to keep all of the children in Alabama supplied with them. If it can, it should be done; but can it be done without greatly increasing the present high tax rate? It is very doubtful.

"Free school books is a misnomer. When the State gives away books, the taxpayer will settle the bill.

Labor and Capital

"New industries within and from without the State should be encouraged to locate in Alabama. Thus labor can secure employment. Labor and capital should work together in harmony—each looking to the interest of the other. Labor should receive just compensation for service; and industry should receive reasonable income from investment. If either, should disagree with the other and the difference could not be amicably settled, then they should separate in peace. Neither should interfere with the work or business of the other; labor should seek employment in another field without molestation from industry, and industry should secure, if it can, other employees without molestation from its former laborers. Destruction of property should not be permitted; and no violence to the person should be tolerated.

Health

"Health and happiness run hand in hand. The Medical Society and Health Department of Alabama stand at the head of the list among the States. It should maintain its standard in reputation and efficiency; and no barriers should be placed by this commonwealth in the way of its wonderful progress.

Agriculture

"The Agricultural Department should be supported and encouraged in its effective and splendid work for the farmers of the State.

Roads

"Public highways are a necessity. They should be built and maintained, connecting the county seats of all the counties as the Constitution of Alabama directs. Has this been done? And other roads should be located and built as the public good requires, and the ability of the State from its revenue may permit. A reasonable amount of bonds should be issued if necessary.

Free Bridges

"There are 15 bridges—some built and some being constructed in Alabama. This is being done by a corporation chartered by Act of the Legislature. It is an agency of the State. Bonds are floated to pay for them. The act provides the cost (approximately $5,000,000) must be paid from tolls by those using the bridges. The bridges are located in 15 or more counties. A bridge here and there connects two counties over a boundary stream between them. It is estimated that the toll from the bridges will pay the cost (principal and interest) in about five years. And the Act provides the bridges will belong to the State and be free to the public when the principal and all expenses are paid in full from the tolls. Should the entire State now be required to assume this $5,000,000 debt, pay it and the interest, and declare the bridges free, would this be fair to the 51 or 52 other counties of the State that have no direct interest in these bridges? Would it be right to tax the citizens of 51 or 52 counties who have no constant use for these bridges to pay nearly all of this $5,000,000? It does not seem right and just to me. This debt should be paid; in my opinion, as the law now directs by tolls from those who use the bridges; and when it is thus paid, let the bridges be free for the public, as the statute directs.

"If these 15 bridges are made free now, then each taxpayer in Alabama will pay his pro rata part of the $5,000,000, the cost thereof, although he may never cross one of these bridges.

Prohibition

"Personally and politically, prohibition is favored by me. Whether in or out of office, my ideas of prohibition are the same. It is no 'experiment.' It is permanently fixed in our national Constitution and State statutes. Its enforcement is as easy as any other criminal statute in our Code.

"For sixteen years the splendid people of the Fourth Judicial Circuit (composed of Bibb, Dallas, Hale, Perry and Wilcox Counties) permitted me to be their Circuit Judge; and they enforced these prohibition statutes as they did the other statutes of the State. Chief Justice Anderson placed me, as Circuit Judge, in charge of the criminal court docket in Mobile County for thirty days. The jurors of that county, whether local optimists or prohibitionists, enforced without fear or favor the prohibition laws in that great seaport city of our State. Men in all parts of Alabama will enforce that law as they enforce other criminal statutes. If elected as the Chief Executive of this State, I would have no forebodings as to the enforcement of this or any of its laws. It can be enforced if the Executive is personally and officially in accord with it; and acts wisely and firmly, without fear and without favor, and with fairness and in reason, and within the constitutional limits. To secure great results we must educate on the subject as well as legislate and enforce the statutes.

Chain Stores

"Chain stores should be regulated by the Legislature, to protect, as far as the Constitution will permit, the single store owners and to secure for the State revenue by a reasonable, regulated, increasing license fee or some other tax on every second, third, fourth, etc., chain store within the State.

Taxation

"Taxation in Alabama, under this administration, has reached the maximum in amount. More funds, by millions, have been collected and expended under this administration than any other administration since the organization of this State. Taxation has reached the limit. It must not be increased. No more taxes should be levied than are necessary to pay the expenses of the government economically administered. Useless offices should be abolished. Departments overloaded with overhead and useless officials should be combined with other departments and the expenses decreased by abolishing the unnecessary offices. Every official and every employee of the State should render full time and service for the salary received. The State should receive in results one hundred cents in work for every dollar spent. There should be no deadheads or semi-deadheads on the State payroll. The barnacles on our ship of State should be scraped off. The business of Alabama should be run in a business way, as a good business man runs his business.

Expert Examination

"It appears from the report of the State Auditor that the annual receipts of the State for 1927 amounted to practically thirty-two million dollars, and for 1928 to forty-eight million dollars; and the disbursement by the State for 1927 amounted to practically thirty-three million dollars, and for 1928 to fifty-one million dollars.

"This shows this administration paid out nearly three million dollars more, in one year than it received. The State should live within its income.

"This growth in receipts (over fifteen million dollars) in one year is enormous.

"The taxpayers should know the exact amounts paid yearly for every department of the State, the names of the person to whom it was paid, the amounts thereof, the legality of it, the purposes of it, and the consideration for it received by the State.

"A thorough examination of all the departments of the State should be made by competent, disinterested, expert accountants; and if I am nominated and elected as your Chief Executive it will be done without delay, and the result made known to the taxpayers.

"Depositors in banks should be protected by adequate legislation. The financial institutions of the State should be made safe by statute for depositors and stockholders.

"A double primary should be restored to the Democratic party in making nominations. The single primary rule now exists by statute. It requires first and, if desired, second choice voting. It permits a plurality vote to make the nomination. A bill was introduced in and passed the Lower House of the last Legislature by a good majority giving the Democratic party majority rule in making nominations. This bill as adopted by the House went to the Senate, where it was not passed, and thereby the 'old Democratic doctrine of majority rule' for this 1930 Democratic primary election can not operate.

"The present statute should be changed. The Democrats should demand and secure this relief from the next Legislature.

The Ku Klux Klan in Government

"There are three departments of government: the legislative, the judicial and executive. They should be kept separate and distinct. Neither should exercise the powers of the other directly nor indirectly, so that we may have a government of laws and not of men."

"Our United States Senators are Klansmen. Many of the representatives and senators of the General Assembly of Alabama are members of this secret order. They and their friends practically controlled almost all legislation in the session held under the present administration.

"One and probably two of the associate justices of the Supreme Court of Alabama are or were Ku Klux Klansmen. Here and there on the Circuit Court bench we find a judge who joined this secret order.

"Our Governor and nearly all of the state officials nominated in the Democratic primary in August, 1926, and elected in November, 1926, were Klansmen. Many of the appointees of the Governor and the employees of the State under this administration are Ku Klux Klansmen. The jury commissioners in many, if not all, of the counties of the State appointed under this administration, are Klansmen.

"The ballot boxes of the Democratic party in Alabama in August, 1926, when opened in the State primary election, contained enough Klan ballots under the present single primary rule to give nearly every State office to Klansmen.

"The keys of many, if not of all, of the jury boxes in Alabama are in the hands of Klansmen.

"The sagacity of our homes and the security of the happiness, property, liberty and life rights of our citizens rest largely in the ballot box and in the jury box. These boxes should not be controlled and dominated by any secret organization.

"The rank and file, by the thousands, in the Ku Klux Klan are fine men, good Democrats, patriotic; and do not endorse Klan rule in government or politics, but there are some leaders in this order who point out the wrong road for the members to travel in Alabama.

"There should be neither a Klan nor anti-Klan government in Alabama.

"The Democrats of Alabama must come back to the fundamental principles of government.

"We must come together, unite, and have government of the people, a government by the people, and a government for all of the people, and not as we have now in Alabama, a government of the Klan, a government by the Klan, and a government for the Klan.

FAIRVIEW 4-H CLUB IS MAKING NICE PROGRESS

Clanton, Ala., July 1. Dear Editor of News: The Fairview 4-H Club boys are putting things over with great success. On last Saturday they played their first baseball game with the crack team from Shiloh. The score was a close one, it being 14 to 12 in favor of Shiloh. On Saturday night a cream supper was given for the benefit of the team. It went over with great success and was enjoyed by everyone. The club boys wish to thank Mr. M. F. Wagoner for the cooperation rendered them. It was largely through his efforts that material for the entertainment was obtained.

THE LEADER WILL SOON MOVE BACK IN OLD STAND

Mr. M. Lande, proprietor of The Leader, one of Clanton's largest dry goods stores, stated this week that their new stock of goods is arriving daily and is being placed in stock at their location in the Johnson Building, next to the Alred Drug Company store. The Johnson Building has been practically rebuilt on the interior as a result of the damage done by fire some time ago. The first floor, which is occupied by The Leader has been put in remarkably fine condition and Mr. Lande states that almost everything will be new in the way of fixtures in his store.

Mr. Lande also stated that he did not intend to move any of the damaged stock of goods back to his new store, but that he was attempting to restock with an entirely new line of goods. He is still operating the store, located two doors east of the post office, on Main street, as well as the store of his location in the Johnson Building.

The Mazaroff Mystery

By J. S. FLETCHER

THE STORY

Mervyn Holt is engaged by a man calling himself Mazaroff as a traveling companion. After a short tour they put up at the Woodcock Inn on Marradale moor. They meet, casually, Mrs. Elphinstone and her daughter, Mrs. Mazaroff. Mazaroff tells Holt they are his wife and daughter and that his real name is Merchison. That night Mazaroff fails to return to the inn and his disappearance is unexplained. Holt meets Sheila and tells her of Mazaroff's disappearance. They go to her cousin's (Vernor Courthouse) shooting box hoping to find some word of Mazaroff. There they meet Mr. Armintrude and Doctor Eccleshare. Holt is questioned by Police Sergeant Manners and a reporter, Bonnas. Mazaroff's murdered body is found. Crole, Mazaroff's lawyer, and Maythorne, private detective, arrive. Valuable diamonds that Mazaroff usually carried are missing. Mrs. Elphinstone scoffs at the idea that Mazaroff is Merchison.

"Nothing absurd, ma'am, in my telling you that," retorted Crole, with the least touch of asperity. "Holt," turning to me, "you will just tell us precisely what Mazaroff confided to you, the second night of your stay at the Woodcock. Tell the whole story."

I told the whole story, as we all stood there in that little room. But, though I watched Mrs. Elphinstone closely during my narrative, I saw no sign of any wavering on her part.

"The thing's absurd!" she declared in the end. "Utterly absurd! The man was probably some adventurer who had got hold of certain facts about Merchison's past history, and wanted to make money out of his knowledge!"

"Um!" Crole said quietly. "Now that, ma'am, if you will pardon me for using plain speech to a lady, is indeed an utterly absurd suggestion! Mr. Mazaroff, or, as we should call him, Mr. Merchison, so far from being a needy adventurer, was a wealthy man, a very wealthy man! And if you will pardon me still further, I will just put something before you. If this man was, as he asserted himself to be, and as we shall probably prove, Andrew Merchison, who married you twenty-two or three years ago, your second marriage with Mr. Elphinstone is no marriage at all! You are still, in law, Mrs. Merchison, and—"

"What is all this leading up to?" demanded Mrs. Elphinstone. "—"

"To this, ma'am," continued Crole, lifting an admonitory finger, "and a very important point, too, as you will quickly see. Although I have had very little dealing with this unfortunate man, I have had some dealing, while he was in London, and it is my distinct impression that he has died intestate."

"Well—and what has that to do with me?" questioned Mrs. Elphinstone.

"Merely this, ma'am. If he was Merchison, and you his wife, and this young lady your child, you and she come in, between you, for every penny he's left! And there will be a great many pennies, or I'm a Dutchman! My advice to you, ma'am, is this—before settling on an attitude of incredulity and denial, just step across to the Woodcock, and see if you cannot satisfy yourself that the man lying there, sadly disfigured, but identifiable, was not the man he claimed to be."

With this Crole made one of his old-fashioned bows and walked out, and I followed him, leaving mother and daughter standing looking at each other. As we passed the gates, Crole pulled out a snuffbox and took a hearty pinch.

"That's a d-d old-fink-like woman, Holt," he said, cynically. "Hard—hard—and obstinate!"

My own impressions of Mrs. Elphinstone were precisely those which Mr. Crole expressed so emphatically. But I was just then thinking of other matters.

"If the real Andrew Merchison was drowned in Mombasa bay," I said, "how could—"

Crole interrupted me with a sharp, sceptical laugh.

"Aye, but was he so drowned—there, or elsewhere, or anywhere?" he exclaimed. "My own belief is that he was never drowned at all! For all that Sinclair, the writer of that letter, knew, Merchison had arranged for a boat to come off for him at a certain hour at night—it comes, and he slips off into it and is clean gone. Easy! He couldn't have sent money and things—especially money—ahead of him to wherever he was bound. Didn't you tell me he spoke of Durban?"

"Of Durban, yes," I answered. "It was there he took the name of Mazaroff."

"Aye, well," continued Crole, "no doubt he'd some reason—other than the one he told you of—for leaving his old name behind him. He may have wished folk in both England and India to believe that Andrew Merchison was dead. But better or no letter, cabin trunk or no cabin trunk, monument or no monument, I believe that Salim Mazaroff was Andrew Merchison, and that he was murdered as Merchison, and not as Mazaroff."

"As—Merchison?" I exclaimed, pausing in sheer surprise. "But—who knew him, here, as Merchison?"

"That's got to be found out, my lad!" he answered, with a knowing look.

We found Maythorne standing at the door of the inn, in company with Musgrave. Maythorne gave Crole a sort of informing smile as we came up to them.

"Mr. Musgrave has just made a discovery," he said. "His gun is missing."

"Not three months since I gave twenty pounds for it!" Musgrave muttered. "Very near brand new it was! Couldn't have believed it could have been taken from there, neither."

"And where was it taken from?" asked Crole.

"It was taken from the private sitting room that Mr. Holt there, and the dead gentleman had," replied the landlord, with a glance at me. "Hung on the wall, on two hooks it was, just inside the door—you may have noticed it, Mr. Holt?"

Mrs. Elphinstone.

"Yes, I noticed a gun there, certainly," I replied. "But—I hadn't noticed that it had gone."

"Nor me—only I haven't been into that room this last two or three days," said Musgrave. "It was the missis that found it out—she came to me about it just now. Of course, some of them drover chaps poked their noses in there, and, seeing nobody about helped themselves to it—easy enough, that would be."

"Was the gun loaded?" asked Maythorne. "I suppose not?"

"Well, it was," admitted Musgrave. "I kept it loaded—you never know what you may want in a lonely place like this."

"Dangerous, though, to keep a loaded gun about, don't you, think?" said Maythorne, good humoredly. "By the bye, what sort of cartridges were there in your gun?"

"Kynoch's, number twelves," replied Musgrave, promptly. "Always use those."

"That might help you in tracing the gun," remarked Maythorne. "You should tell the police that." He turned from the landlord towards the moor, motioning Crole and myself to follow him. "I'm going to have a look at this Reiver's den," he said. "Better come with me. Odd, isn't it, that Musgrave's gun, loaded with number twelves, should disappear on this very night on which Mazaroff is shot dead? Didn't you tell us, Mr. Holt, that the doctor showed you some shot which he called number twelves?"

"He did," I assented.

"I suppose this doctor—what's his name—Eccleshare?—knows number twelves from number tens?" he suggested.

"He's a shooting man, himself," I replied. "Staying at High Cap lodge with a shooting party."

"Ah, then he'd know what he was talking about," he remarked, and turned from me to Crole. "Well—and Mrs. Elphinstone?"

Crole told him all about our doings at Marradale tower as we walked across the moor. He listened and said little. But I noticed that his eyes grew brighter and his whole air more alert when we came to Reiver's den—a black, gloomy, eerie; just the place for murderous deeds. There was a local policeman on guard there; he showed us the place where Mazaroff's body had lain and been discovered. This was amongst a mass of gorse and bramble at the foot of an almost perpendicular rock, some thirty to forty feet in height.

"My mate, what found him," the policeman said, in a confidential whisper, "he says as how when he first come across him, he thought as the gentleman had fallen over them crags in the darkness. But of course he hadn't—and 'cause why? If he'd ha' fallen from there, he'd ha' broken his neck and every bone in his body; big, heavy man like that he was. And there wasn't no bones broken. My impression, gentlemen, is as how he was murdered first, and carried here afterwards. Look how these here shrubs is trampled down!"

Maythorne was closely examining the surroundings; I noticed that he, too, was apparently struck by the evident trampling of the gorse and bramble. Once or twice he stopped, as if to look closer at his objects—once I saw him pick something from the ground and thrust it into his waistcoat pocket. Presently he came back to where Crole and I stood with the policeman.

"If a gun were fired in this ravine, those rocks would give back a fine reverberation," he observed. Then he looked at the policeman. "You didn't hear anything that night?" he asked with a smile.

"I heard nothing," agreed the policeman. "Don't know nobody as did, neither. There's a cottage by here—just back of that clump of beech—the folks there, they didn't hear nothing. Not—nothing whatsoever!"

"Oh, there's a cottage there, is there?" said Maythorne. "And who lives in it?"

"Old shepherd and his missis—Jim Cowie, his name is," replied the policeman. "I was talking to him about this affair just now—they heard nothing."

Maythorne turned away, toward the clump of beech. We followed him, along a narrow track that ran at the foot of the rocks under the lower branches of the trees, and went up a flagged path to the cottage door; Maythorne knocked; a woman's voice bade us enter.

Inside, at a round table drawn up in front of a turf fire, an old man and an old woman sat. At sight of us, the old woman rose, politely, but the old man stuck to his seat, eyeing us with no friendly glance. He got in the first word, too, surily, before Maythorne could address him.

"Don't know nothing about that there affair in the den yonder!" he growled. "Tell'd the policeman just now we neither heard nor see'd anything, and don't want no bother about it!"

"My good friend!" said Maythorne, soothingly. "We only wanted to ask you where this footpath, that crosses Reiver's den, and goes outside your garden, leads to? We're strangers."

"There now, master!" remarked the old woman, glancing reprovingly at the old man. "You see now!—this gentleman's only asking his way. The path, sir—it leads across the moor to High Cap lodge, sir; Mr. Court-hope's place."

"Then it makes a short cut to—where, now?" asked Maythorne.

"Well, sir, it's a short cut from Mr. Court-hope's to Birnsdale, and to the Woodcock," replied the old woman. "But it's little used, sir—it's little better than a sheep track."

"And we didn't see nobody along it that night, neither one way nor t'other," growled the old man. "Don't know nothing—ain't got nothing to tell—nothing!"

We backed out, closed the door, and went away. Maythorne smiled—inscrutably.

"All the same, Mazaroff followed this path," he said. "Why? Did he want to go to High Cap lodge?—Mr. Court-hope's place? Or—had he been there and was coming away from it? Who knows? However, I want to go up to the top of those rocks."

He turned off the path, and began to make his way to the head of the ravine through the scrub and undergrowth. Crole and I followed. We came out on a sort of plateau, overlooking the black depths in which Mazaroff's body had been found. And there, a solitary figure, stood another old man, older, it seemed, than the crusty and ancient fellow we had just left; grayer, more gaunt and wrinkled, but erect and alert, and evidently quick of hearing as a boy, for at the first sound of our approach he turned sharply upon us.

"The place already attracts the curious," he observed, half-ironically.

"We have something more than idle curiosity to bring us here, sir," retorted Crole, almost sharply. "We are the dead gentleman's friends! May I in my turn ask—as you seem interested in the matter—if you can tell us anything to help us?"

The old man smiled, and looked from one to the other.

"Well, I could tell you of something, but whether it will help you or not I don't know. Yet—it might. I heard a gun discharged—hereabouts—on the night this man was missed."

"And about what time would that be?" inquired Crole.

"About what is usually my bedtime," replied the old fellow. "Ten o'clock."

Crole looked at Maythorne. "That must have been the shot," he said, musingly.

Just then the policeman at the foot of the rocks, who had been pottering about the bushes, looked up, and waved his hand excitedly.

"Come down here!" he shouted. "I've found something. A gun!"

We began to descend the rocks to the dense undergrowth amidst which the policeman stood. He was gingerly handling a sporting gun, and as we drew up to him, he nodded toward a clump of overgrown gorse.

"Shoved in beneath that!" he exclaimed. "That's where it was."

Maythorne opened the breach—there were two cartridges in the barrels; one, in the choke-bore barrel, had been discharged. He glanced at Crole.

"Odd!" he said. "Why didn't he use the right-hand barrel?"

The old gentleman, who seemed to be fascinated by the sight of a weapon that had doubtless been used by a murderer, laughed a little.

"If that's the gun that was used to shoot this young gentleman's elderly companion," he remarked, "as I, personally, have no doubt it was, there's a good reason why the murderer used the left-hand barrel. Perhaps you're not a shooting man, sir?—If not, I may tell you that the left-hand barrel of a fowling piece is always narrowed in the bore as it approaches the muzzle; the notion, of course, is that the shot, or discharge, if a man wanted to shoot another man dead, at close quarters—as in this case, he'd naturally use the choke-bore barrel in preference to the other."

Then, with a polite nod, he turned and went off. Maythorne watched him for a minute or so; then glanced at the policeman.

"Who is that old gentleman?" he asked.

"That's Mr. Hassendean, of Birnsdale house, sir," replied the policeman.

Maythorne drew Crole's attention and mine to a name and address engraved on a plate let into the stock—Mugger, Woodcock Inn, Marradale. "This is the landlady's missing property, sure enough," he remarked.

We left Reiver's den, and went back across the moor. Maythorne, as soon as we reached the Woodcock, sought out Musgrave and told him of the discovery of his missing gun. He hurried over his lunch, and as soon as I had finished mine, addressed me.

"The police are sure to come along here after the finding of that gun," he remarked. "And I want to be beforehand with them. I want to examine Mazaroff's belongings."

"Just so!" murmured Crole. "That, of course, must be done."

We went up to the dead man's room. Maythorne did the searching while Crole and I looked on. In the waistcoat pockets of a well-worn tweed suit Maythorne found a number of loose diamonds, large and small.

"What did I tell you?" exclaimed Crole as the diamonds came to light. "He did carry diamonds, loose, on him? Look at those, now—must be a dozen or so stones there, loose in his pocket! Do you suppose those are worth a lot, Maythorne?—You know more about it than I do."

"Can't say," replied Maythorne, indifferently. He was more deeply interested in a crumpled scrap of thin paper which he found in an inner pocket and smoothed out before us.

"Look at this!" he said presently. "Here's something, at any rate."

GOVERNMENT BY PARTY BEST

By EX-PRESIDENT COOLIDGE

IT IS necessary to have parties to maintain our form of government. Free government must be through political parties. The countries which we consider or speak of as backward continue to suffer most because they do not have well-organized political parties. When changes are desired, they are often driven to revolutionary methods to gain what is wanted.

We ought not to expect perfection in our government—certainly not when it is in the hands of the opposition, and certainly the opposition does not expect it of us when the power is in our hands.

I don't know of any other method of perfecting our form of government except through parties. One person becomes ineffective in any effort, and the only method for success is through co-operation.

We have come to believe that the best results come from having major parties rather than a multiplicity of parties. We have always had two parties, under one name or another.

We are not warranted in expecting perfection in parties, but we must pick out the principles which we believe are the best and go with the party which best represents them.

The success of a President is more or less the success of the country and unless the people give the President their support, the country will not be a success.

EFFECT OF WOMEN IN INDUSTRY

By REV. DR. SOCKMAN, New York (Methodist).

The entrance of women into business and industry has given them a new respect for their powers and has made a profound difference in their attitude toward marriage. The fact that two-thirds of the divorces in the United States are granted on demand of the wives does not prove that two-thirds of the blame rests with the husbands. The root cause of many divorces runs back into the undisciplined and individualistic freedom of premarital living on the part of both women and men. After a youth spent in indulgence, too many prodigal daughters, discontented with their marriage, says in the words of the prodigal son, "I will arise and go to my father."

The professional and business woman is ceasing to be conscious of her sex or to claim special consideration because of it. While women's politics may still be inclined to capitalize femininity, the novelty is soon to be gone.

It is in the less well paid forms of employment like the factory and domestic service that the struggle for women's rights still is chiefly fought. Justice in these realms can be secured only by the co-operation and recognition of women among themselves and by a Christian imagination which can understand the emotional factors involved.

VENGEANCE NOT FOR SOCIETY

By LORD BUCKMASTER, Former British Chancellor

Every single one of the arguments used today in favor of capital punishment as a deterrent was used, and for a long time with success, the early part of the Nineteenth century when capital punishment was common penalty for civil offenses.

In each case you deny the sacredness of life. You have taken to yourself, either as individuals or as the state, the power to take away which you can never give.

I am not satisfied as to capital punishment being a deterrent. I think that always assumes that a man creates a balance sheet when he goes to commit murder, and puts capital punishment on the debit against anything he might get on the credit side. There are a few cold-blooded murders, but the bulk of murders are nothing of the kind, but are crimes committed when a man loses control of himself.

I don't think that society has any right to wreak vengeance upon one. It is my belief that the real deterrent against crime is social opinion. It is not the police nor the laws. It is the healthy public opinion which affects and surrounds a man from his youth—I am satisfied myself—it is to that more than anything else we owe the lessening in our criminal characters.

PUBLISHERS PROTECT PUBLIC

By W. E. HUMPHREYS, Federal Trade Commission.

Publishers throughout the country are to be credited with responsibility for the success of the campaign of the federal trade commission against fraudulent advertising. In the last six months, according to figures I have gathered, publishers have rejected not less than $100,000 worth of questionable advertising. As a result, the public has been protected from being robbed of not less than $150,000,000.

The press in this matter has rendered a great public service. I believe that within a year the advertising columns of publications will be practically free of that class of advertisements that are plainly

But whether it takes a year or ten years, or however long it takes, the fight is going to continue until these fakers and crooked scoundrels who live by robbing the unwary and unfortunate are put of business. In this undertaking we have the support of every honest publisher in America. We have the support of every honest advertising agency in America. We believe that we have the support of every decent American citizen.

LAWYERS MUST "CLEAN HOUSE"

By CHIEF JUSTICE CHARLES EVANS HUGHES

Attempts by lawyers to thwart the administration of justice, delays, sharp practice and chicanery should be unsparingly exposed. They have no place in a profession where skill and honor should be in hand.

Even when purged, as it should be, of its delinquents, the only at the threshold of its opportunity to devote its technical knowledge to the effort to adjust the mechanism of justice to the demands of a complex society to which old methods in many respects are unsuited.

While improvement in this direction is necessarily slow, better selections may immediately perform a great service in strongly insisting selection of capable prosecutors, magistrates and judges.

When Armies Meet in Battle on Chessboard

The principles of chess are based on the struggle of every-day life. It is a battle between two armies of equal strength, fought on a field of 64 squares. Victory usually perches on the more proficient of the two generals in command. In a technical sense, the capture of the opposing king is not permitted, yet when the capture is inevitable, the game is ended. This fact seems to escape the recognition of many players, who direct their entire energies to the capture of pieces or pawns, when consistent play would indicate an easy road to victory through the medium of a checkmate. The temptation to proceed with the attack before all the pawns are in the field is a great one, but such premature attacks are usually abortive and frequently result in disaster. Chess literature abounds in examples of games in which disaster and defeat were a direct consequence of the failure to develop properly one or another of the pieces.—Exchange

Birds Named Themselves

The peewee named itself by its call, and bob white wrote its name into his greeting. By its call, the cuckoo has made himself an international character, while the chickadee has individualized itself in its utterance. When asked what's in a name, the birds might reply: "We have put most of ourselves into them, and they have been most excellent advertising."

Seeing Big League Baseball

By BILLY EVANS
Sports writer, Big League Umpire and General Manager of the Cleveland Indians

Making my debut as a world series umpire, I faced the biggest crowd in the history of the annual clash up to that time. It numbered about 35,000 people. Some crowd way back in 1909.

On account of the overflow crowd it was necessary to have ground rules. Temporary stands had been erected in front of the permanent ones along the right field line. They extended over to the permanent stands that stretched across the outfield, and joined them at a sharp angle just at the foul line. Ground rules were, that a ball hit fair into the permanent seats was a home run, and a ball hit fair into the temporary stands was good only for a two-base hit. It may sound to the reader like a pretty fine distinction, but about the only possibility of hitting a ball fair into the stands to the right of the foul line lay in its striking fair in the outfield and bounding in. The stage was all set for the toughest decision I was ever called upon to make during my entire career.

I think it was in Pittsburgh's half of the first inning that the decision in question came up. However, it makes little difference. The point is that, with a man on third base, "Dots" Miller, Pittsburgh second baseman, hit a terrific drive to right field. I was behind the plate, Bill Klem working the bases. The decision, therefore, was up to me. It was apparent, once the ball was hit, that my work was cut out for me, so I watched its course quite carefully. The pesky thing, after hitting the ground very close to the foul line, bounced high into the air and disappeared into the stands, where it was caught and pocketed by a souvenir-hunting rooster. Which stand it went into I did not know; it was so close to the foul line.

Here was a dilemma. "Good Lord," thinks I, "what are you going to call it, a two-bagger or a home run?"

Fred Clarke, Pittsburgh manager, came up. "What is? You're not going to call it a two-base hit, are you?"

And Hughie Jennings and a group of his Tigers came to me, protesting vehemently that it was not a home run. "Get away, all of you," I shouted, "until I talk it over with Klem." Here was a decision that simply had me "baffled." I needed time to think it over, time to confer with Klem before I could give anything that looked like an intelligent ruling. I felt that I was a disgrace to myself and to baseball. Finally, for no particular reason than to think, I started walking out toward right field,

BILL, THE BUS DRIVER SAYS

Killin' folks outright is bad enough, but even scarin' 'em to death don't air you no aplicee."

(By MARCUS A. DOW.)

Did you ever try to lead a spirited mound dawg on a leash, or did one of them ever lead you? You know the kind I mean, one of them yunkin', stralin', tuggin', yelpin' hounds with 'ward march on the double quick as their main object in life.

I know a lot of boozes who make their automobiles act like one of those restless hounds strainin' on a leash while they're waitin' for the traffic light to change. They shoot forward like the leash had busted, and if they knock down a walker who ain't had time to reach the curb, it's all in the day's fun to them babies.

The red light was showin' on a crossin' in a little upstate burg and cross steam was goin' by while the main steam drivers sat still. Among 'em was a drivin' fool at the wheel of a six-cylinder bound dawg. He had a sixth sense that could tell him just three seconds in advance of when the light would change. His engine let out a snort like the yelp of a hound, and at the first ray of green he jumped his bus almost off the pavement in his anxiety to be off in a hurry. As the iron bound jumped, the dust on the fender just brushed the skirts of a motherly lookin' old lady the two managers, Hughie Jennings and Fred Clarke, following me. The stands literally were rocking with demands for decision.

As I neared the extreme limits of right field I could see I was approaching that section in the temporary stands that was occupied by the Pittsburgh Loyal Rooters club. A big banner was strung across the stands to that effect. As I approached they started shouting to me, and almost the first words I distinguished were the very inspiration I had been waiting for!

"Hey, you're not going to call that a foul, are you? Are you blind?" Of course, I wasn't even thinking of calling it a foul. I had seen it strike fair. But I didn't let on what was in my mind.

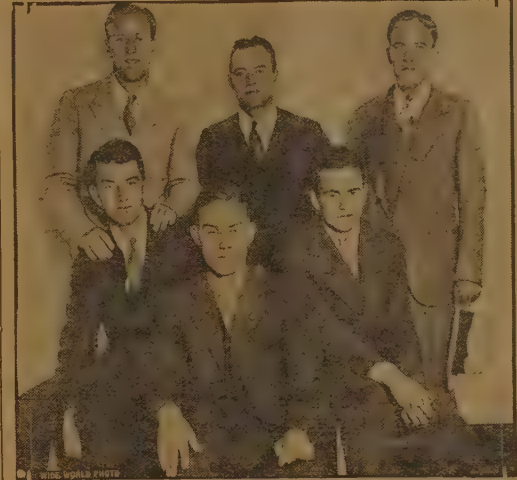

"I don't know," I answered. "I'll have to rely on you for a little help. Was it fair or foul?"

"Fair!" they yelled as one man. "All right, then, where did it land?"

"The ball landed right here." A burly rooster had stood up and was brandishing the ball. "I caught it, and here it is. Just try and get it."

"That makes it look like a two-bagger, Fred," I said to Clarke. "One of your own rooters offers the proof."

Night Baseball Games Are Meeting With Much Favor

Night baseball now has been on trial long enough to be termed a moderate success. He agreed, and I lost no time getting back and making my decision.

That, I think, was the toughest decision of my career. Certainly none ever came in a tougher spot. Maybe I have had others occasionally that at the time were equally as perplexing, but not in such an important game. (By the Bell Syndicate, Inc.)

Really Thoughtful Act of Modern Daughter

"This is the age of selfishness," declares Kate Lee Stahl, the social worker. "Or maybe it is just thoughtlessness. I am not sure which. At any rate, the young girl of today seems to think and do everything but housework. She leaves that to mother."

"Not long ago, I was instrumental in helping a young girl get a start in life and shortly after, when I met her on the street, I asked her how things were going at home."

"Oh, just fine!" she cried. "Why, just think, last week I was able to buy mother a nice vacuum cleaner."

"That was very thoughtful of you."

"Yes, I guess it was. You see, mother is a little stiffened up with rheumatism and I used to feel so sorry to see her trying to use a broom that I always left the house on sweeping day!"—Los Angeles Times.

His Jinx Active

From now on William Illeginson of Medicine Bow, Wyo., plans to walk when he wants to go any place. He recently stepped in the way of a horse's kick and emerged with a broken leg. He was placed in an automobile and rushed toward Laramie for medical attention. The car hit some loose gravel and smashed into a pole. Illeginson finally reached the hospital with a broken arm to match his broken leg.

Sundial Made of Cement

One of the suburbs of San Francisco has undertaken to attract some attention to itself by erecting the largest sundial ever made. It is made of concrete and its top is high above the heads of the spectators and its shadow is cast upon the ground which is marked off for the purpose of indicating the time. The inclined surface of the dial is often irreverently used by children for the purpose of a kelly slide.

German "Luggies" Ire Scots

Loyal Scots are perturbed over the importation of "luggies," miniature milking pails used for porridge dishes for children. The luggie has been distinctly a Scotch institution until the death in Cumberland recently of the last luggie maker of the country. Since then Germany has been shipping into Scotland cheap imitations of the unique bowl.

Monte Carlo Bathed in Light

By an elaborate system of exterior illumination, Monte Carlo, the playground of Europe, has been transformed into almost a fairyland of lights. At night the famous casino is bathed in white lights and the broad avenues leading to it are illuminated. Trees, fountains and even flower pots are decorated with concealed lighting effects.

After walking 70,000 miles in the last nine years, John Shields has just retired as postman at Newton Stewart, Scotland. His daily route covered 17 miles. He was with the postal service for 33 years, and previous to that had served in the army in India and Africa.

ernor Graves to fill the unexpired term of R. E. Tidwell.

In a recent statement from Dr. Harman, who is well known and well liked over the entire state by those who have dealings with him, he said: "I have served in practically every school capacity during the past thirty-two years, from teacher of a one-room rural school to the state superintendency. Perhaps my outstanding service to education in the state has been as superintendent of the Selma Public Schools where I worked twelve years and later in Montgomery County where I was superintendent for seven and one-half years."

The early education of Dr. Harman was obtained in Peabody College, at Nashville, in which institution he held a scholarship obtained in a competitive examination and which enabled him to receive his educational start. He is also a graduate of Teachers College, Columbia University, New York City. Dr. Harman in a short address to the members of the Clanton Kiwanis Club last Thursday, gave an outline of an address on Building A City, in which he suggested some of the most influential factors which tend to influence the life and happiness of urban communities. Some of these mentioned by Dr. Harman were, Health, Religion, Education, Recreational Facilities and last, Cleanliness and Beauty. In concluding his speech at the Kiwanis luncheon, he commented particularly on the fact that hundreds, if not thousands, of people pass through Clanton annually are most friendly toward the town and its people. He ended by saying: "Both as a citizen and candidate for public office, I have many times enjoyed the courtesies and accommodations of your business people."

Organized Farmers Are Striving For Five Things

Montgomery, Ala., July 3.—"Organized farmers are striving for five things in agriculture; namely, efficient production, better merchandising in selling the products of the farm and in purchasing supplies that go into production, better living standards, by increasing the farm income; a well rounded community, and an equal opportunity for agriculture," said J. A. Beaty, director of field service of the Alabama Farm Bureau Federation in an interview yesterday afternoon.

"Under our plan for bringing a realization of these five things to every farm family in Alabama, several parties are cooperating. The college at Auburn, through its experiment station and Extension Service, the Department of Agriculture, both state and national and the farmer." Mr. Beaty said in a prepared statement.

For the farmer to do his part in this program he must cooperate with the farmers of his community, state and nation," he said.

James Sherwood of St. Louis promised a police magistrate not to quarrel with his wife unless his "mother-in-law poked her nose into his business."

Directs A&P's buying

If you hired a personal agent to buy food in the markets of the world for your own table, you would give him, first, money for the purchase and shipping costs; second, money to cover his expenses; and, third, a salary for his services. You, yourself, would choose the kind of food he would buy.

That's just what you do when you trade with A & P.

Of every dollar which you pay over A & P counters, 83½ cents go to food producing communities* in exchange for the food you ask for.

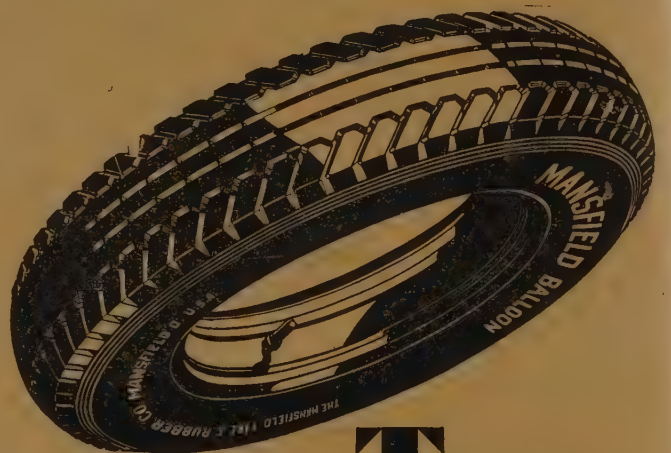

A & P's part is to find out what you want—by what you order in its stores—and to spend your 83½ cents as you direct. Of the rest of your dollar, 14 cents stay in your neighborhood to run A & P stores.

All you pay A & P for its services is the remaining 2½ cents.

*Another article will tell how your money buying helps American food producers as much as it helps you—fair tilt for fat.

Southern Cross Makes Westward Flight Across the Atlantic Ocean.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

ONCE again the Atlantic has been conquered by aviators, and this time it was the westward passage, made successfully but once before, that was negotiated. Maj. Charles Kingsford-Smith of Australia and three companions flew the famous plane Southern Cross from Port Moresby, Ireland, near Dublin, and made a safe landing at Harbor Grace, Newfoundland. Their intended destination was New York, but when they neared the Newfoundland coast they ran into dense fogs and for six hours flew blind, losing their course and wandering aimlessly. Meanwhile their fuel was running low and their predicament seemed serious. However, their radio was efficient and the operator, John W. Stannage, kept in constant communication with ships and shore stations. A relief plane was about to take off from Harbor Grace when the Southern Cross came in out of the fog and dropped gracefully to earth.

While Kingsford-Smith, Stannage and their companions, Evert Van Dyk and Capt. J. Patrick Saul, rested after the two thousand mile flight the plane was refueled, and next morning at daylight the trip to New York was resumed. Major Kingsford-Smith said they would fly later to San Francisco, completing a round the world flight for him and the plane.

New York city gave the gallant aviators its customary reception, with pageant, parade, luncheons and dinners. The pilot brought across a letter from President Cosgrave of the Irish Free State to President Hoover, which he planned to deliver in person at the White House.

The directors and executives of the National Air Races sent Major Kingsford-Smith a telegram of warm congratulation and invited him to remain over in Chicago or to return from the Pacific coast to be their guest during the races, which begin August 23.

COL. ROBERTO FIERRO, now Mexico's air hero, made a non-stop flight from New York to Mexico City in 19 hours and 35 minutes, a new record and ten hours less than the time taken by Colonel Lindbergh for the trip from Washington to Mexico City last December.

YET another most auspicious event in aviation circles, so to speak, was the birth of a fine son to Colonel and Mrs. Lindbergh at Englewood, N. J. The glad news was given all the world immediately by newspaper bulletins and radio broadcasts, and congratulatory messages poured in on the happy parents. The colonel was characteristically reticent, but Ambassador Morrow proclaimed himself the happiest grandfather in the world. In filling out the birth certificate Mrs. Lindbergh designated herself as a professional flyer and gave her home as St. Louis, Mo.

Rear Admiral Byrd and Colonel Lindbergh met in a New York hotel and exchanged congratulations. Byrd mentioned the birth of Lindbergh's son and the colonel's high altitude coast to coast flight. Lindbergh spoke glowingly of the aerial trip to the South pole. He left his congratulations for Bernt Balchen, the pilot of Byrd's plane on its polar dash.

PRESIDENT HOOVER last week was compelled by his honest convictions to veto another pension bill, and this time the veto was upheld by the house of representatives. The measure was the World war veterans bill originating in the house and passed by the senate despite Mr. Hoover's warning that he would not support it. Only six senators voted against the bill, which the President said was "bad legislation," against the best interests of the veterans themselves and placing "an unjustified load upon the taxpayers at a time every effort should be made to lighten it."

As soon as the senate had acted, the Republicans of the house held a caucus and enough votes were pledged to sustain the veto. To facilitate action the house accepted the senate amendments and the measure was sent to Mr. Hoover. Then, immediately after his veto message was received, the vote sustaining it was taken. A substitute bill was then rushed through the house, with the prospect of definite action on it by the senate within a few days. The new measure embodies the pension system. Its initial annual cost to the government will be $50,000,000, which will increase to $80,000,000 in three years. It will apply to probably 200,000 veterans (in addition to 245,000 now receiving compensation) whose pensions will range from $12 to $40 a month, depending upon the degree of disability. The vetoed bill, according to Director Hines of the veterans' bureau, would have cost $102,000,000 the first year and ultimately would have added $225,000,000 annually to the present expenditures for veterans.

BY a vote of 16 to 4 the senate foreign relations committee reported the London naval treaty to the senate for approval. Neither Chairman Borah nor the warmest advocates of the pact on the committee submitted any written report explaining and commending it. The four who refused to recommend its ratification were Johnson of California, Moses of New Hampshire, Robinson of Indiana and Shipstead of Minnesota.

President Hoover remained steadfast in his intention of calling an immediate special session of the senate to act on the treaty, although twenty-four senators signed a round robin petition asking him to abandon this plan and allow consideration of the pact to be postponed until after the November elections.

Administration leaders are confident the treaty will be ratified eventually, but admit the controversy will be long and bitter. The opposition has prepared proposed reservations which would include the following declarations:

That the treaty involves no permanent surrender of the previously claimed right of the United States to build as it pleases.

That under the so-called "escape clause" America can build whatever type of ship it desires in the event of England or Japan building beyond the treaty limits because of the construction programs of nations not signatory to the pact.

That under the replacement clauses Great Britain can replace her 6-inch gun cruisers with ships of that category.

SENT for triple damages of $30,000,000 was filed in Kansas City by the Grigsby-Grunow company of Chicago against the Radio Corporation of America, the General Electric company, the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing company and others, and the plaintiff concern alleges the existence of a vast pool of radio patents created in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law, and says the defendants thus illegally compelled the payment of royalties of almost $6,000,000 by the Grigsby-Grunow company.

ROTARY International celebrated its silver jubilee last week in Chicago, the city of its birth. Members to the number of some 18,000 assembled from all parts of the world, with their families, and the doings included not only banquets and other festive events but also sessions in which the problems of the trades and professions were seriously discussed and many social questions were debated.

CHESTER H. GRAY, Washington representative of the Farm Bureau federation, has given out an analysis purporting to show that agriculture benefits much more from the new tariff law than does industry.

Duties on raw agricultural products have been increased on an average by 51.6 per cent over the rates of the 1922 law, tabulations made by Mr. Gray indicate. The industrial rate increases have averaged 14.6 per cent, the agricultural increases being more than three times as much as industrial increases.

HOUSE and senate conferees agreed on the rivers and harbors bill exactly as it was passed by the senate, and it was sent to the President for his approval. It is estimated that the bill authorizes the expenditure of more than $135,000,000 on projects which it completed will cost in excess of $300,000,000. Actual expenditures must be made from the lump sum annual appropriation of $55,000,000 at the disposal of the army engineers.

AMOS W. W. WOODCOCK was selected to be director of the bureau of prohibition in the Department of Justice to begin his work on July 1, the date of transfer of prohibition enforcement from the Treasury department. Mr. Woodcock has been United States district attorney at Baltimore, is forty-six years old and served through the World war. He will be the chief aid of G. A. Youngquist, assistant attorney general in charge of dry law and income tax prosecutions, in the latter's initial drive to better dry law enforcement.

PUBLICATION of the second section of the report of the Simon commission on India served only to accentuate the rage of the Indian Nationalists. The commission recommends primarily that there be a federal organization of all the Indian states; that the new constitution should, so far as possible, contain within itself provision for its own development, allowing for natural growth and diversity; and that during the period in which India is progressing on the road to complete self-government, there must be full provision made for the efficiency of the fundamentals of government, which means that for many years the presence of British troops, and British officers serving in Indian regiments, will be essential.

REPORTS of the serious illness of Pope Pius XI alarmed Rome and the whole Catholic world. It was said he was suffering from an acute bladder trouble and that uremic poisoning was threatened. The Vatican, however, gave out information tending to show the reports were exaggerated and indicated that his plans for certain important ceremonies had not been altered.

Trondhjem, Viking Capital

Haymaking in Norway.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

TRONDHJEM, old Viking capital, and the surrounding country of central Norway, recently celebrated the nine hundredth anniversary of the death of Norway's patron, Saint Olaf, the king who established Christianity in Europe's northwestern corner. The city's name was officially changed a few months ago to Nidaros, its ancient designation; but the inhabitants are not unanimously pleased with the change, and "Trondhjem" continues in partial use.

Modern Trondhjem is built on a peninsula formed by the River Nid and the Trondhjem fiord which indents Norway's west coast. Its houses are cheerful frame structures painted in white or light colors, with potted plants making colorful spots at their windows. The royal palace, a huge, white building, is one of the largest wooden buildings in the world.

The shops have many unusual wares for visitors. Furs are sold and there is a demand for blue and silver fox, polar bear and ermine. Elderdown quilts, bear skin rugs, embroideries, carved wood souvenirs, and silver carved in old Norse designs are popular with tourists. Many of the larger shops are on Olaf Trygvasson street, which was named after the town's founder.

Although it lies in the same latitude as southern Iceland, Trondhjem has summers like those of England, and its winters are no more severe than those of Germany. The river and the fiord are seldom frozen. In summer numerous trees and shrubs give the town a semitropical appearance which the visitor had not expected.

The long Arctic summer daylight has its effect on the farmlands surrounding Trondhjem. Often there are two crops a year of produce which yields but one crop in temperate climates.

Norse Coronation Place. Trondhjem was the coronation place of ancient Norse kings; and the present king, Haakon VII, was crowned there in 1906 when the union of Sweden and Norway was dissolved. The city has a population of some 55,000. Much of its life centers about the water front. The ship building industry is brisk and there is a boat service between Trondhjem and Bergen and the North Cape. Numerous fishing boats come in with their cargoes of salted herring to be deposited in the tall, quaint gabled warehouses which line the quays.

The lofty Gothic spires of Trondhjem cathedral rise above the surrounding low buildings of purely Norse architecture in striking contrast to them. The cathedral looks like a transplanted English church in a Norse setting. Its Gothic style may be attributed to Norwegians, living in England when the Gothic architecture was attaining its vogue, who preferred it to the stamper Norse style and incorporated it into the cathedral. The structure was begun during the reign of Olaf the Quiet, between 1050 and 1063.

All the excitement which marks our most generally observed holidays, Christmas, attends the Day of St. John on June 24. While it bears a Christian name, the holiday and its customs go back to pagan origin. In effect the day still is a festival of the sun. Green birch trees adorn every house and children carry evergreen branches through the streets.

The analogy to Christmas breaks down, however, when younger folk crowd into boats on the fiords or hike to the mountain woods which, at twilight, are decked with bonfires. All night long these bonfires burn, as ghostly figures of the merry makers dance and sing around them.

Life in Central Norway. Yearly more visitors are strapping on their knapsacks for walking trips through the rugged countryside of central Norway, where every rock-hewn road seems to lead to a fiord, and where the native customs defy the inroads of such dribbles of travel as now sift through.

The visitor goes to church, and the simple services seem stereotyped enough until a bit of statuary descends from the ceiling. The figure of an angel, supported by a rod, holds a bowl filled with water. The surprised visitor realizes this theatrical appearance is a baptismal font.

The simplicity and innocence of the country folk in the remote and isolated sections is betokened by their promiscuous bathing. And by "bathing" is meant just that; not the diversion of water splashing and sand sunning, but getting oneself clean. A log hut is the village bathhouse. A furnace of stones is heated and water poured over the red-hot surface.

Into this steam steps a family—men, women, children, visiting relatives and neighbors. The bathers switch each other with birch twigs to induce more perspiration and gleefully throw buckets of cold water over each other when the heat becomes too intense. All of this is nothing of an orgy—but as prosaic as our daily bath. The rural Norwegian would see nothing humorous nor funny in an American hotel which inadvertently advertised "1,000 rooms, and bath."

In a Vermont village each family once had its horse and buggy, a vehicle now supplanted by the automobile. In a Norway hamlet a boat is the principal family conveyance in summer. There fishing takes the place of furnishing and the houses are strung around a bend of a fiord instead of along a rambling main street.

Grazing herds of goats is the principal land industry of Norway's hilly north country and these flocks give rise to the picturesque scenery. The mountain pastures usually are far removed from the villages and each spring sees the young farm women driving their herds up the mountain paths to some lofty but sheltered valley among the glistening, snow-capped peaks. There they remain all summer long, camping in wooden huts, visited occasionally by their men folk to carry away the butter and cheese.

Goat's Cheese is a Staple. Goat's cheese, a delicatessen delicacy in the United States, is a principal article of Norwegian diet. It has the rich, brown color and something of the flavor of peanut butter. It is not eaten on crackers as a supplementary course but, sliced and laid on large coarse sections of brown bread, is a staple of the meal.

Characteristic of inland Norway is Lillehammer which lies at the northern end of Mjøsen lake, Norway's largest body of fresh water. The town is a gateway to the Gudbrandsdalen. In this valley many ancient customs and costumes of the country are still in vogue. The town itself lies on the north and south rail route from Oslo to Trondhjem, and is visited annually by thousands of tourists.

This region differs markedly from the fiord country bordering the Atlantic coast and the "land of the midnight sun" which lies farther to the north. In spite of its high latitude Lillehammer enjoys a comparatively mild climate, resort hotels being open for visitors the year round.

Out Again, In Again Is Hospital Record Of Dallas Girl, Eight

Selma, Ala., June 29.—The next time Beatrice Watts leaves the hospital she intends to go home—safely. In fact, the 8-year-old girl, a resident of Plantersville, Dallas County, said so herself.

Beatrice was taken to the hospital here Friday after falling into a 36-foot well. After being released Saturday she was being taken home in an automobile when the car was in collision with another machine, and a few moments later the girl was back in the hospital again.

Beatrice was painfully bruised in the fall in the well and was thrown from the car in the latter accident. Physicians said her condition was not serious.

Cotton Helped By Torrid Spell. Corn, Minor Crops Are Retarded

By P. O. Davis

Auburn, Ala., June 29.—The torrid weather of the week ended Saturday was both helpful and harmful to Alabama crops. In the main cotton was helped by it for this crop had been retarded and injured by cool nights. On the other hand the weather was harmful to corn as well as to tomatoes, cantaloupes and other minor crops.

A summary of the crop reports received by the college of agriculture at Auburn from the county demonstration agents shows that the cotton crop over the state is growing rapidly and that the color has improved, due to better weather for cotton. The crop is clean throughout the state, following two weeks of dry weather.

In South Alabama cotton is blooming and in North Alabama it is setting squares. Very little change in the boll weevil situation is reported. Although weevils are active throughout the Southern two-thirds of the state they are not abundant in numbers except in scattered fields. Prof. J. M. Robinson, entomologist at Auburn, says that the heat wave was not detrimental to adult weevils. It probably was fatal to grubs in squares dropped to the ground.

Reports for corn are not so favorable. Most early corn is needing rain; and a good rain would be helpful also to late corn. County Agent Culpepper reported that a little of the early corn in Monroe County has dried out and is falling down as a result of the drought, coupled with high temperatures for almost a week.

Corn Crop Outlook

Viewed as a whole, the reports showed that the corn crop still promises normal yields provided good rains are received at an early date. While yields of early corn appear to have been reduced already that which was planted later will respond quickly to a good rain, which means that the progress of the corn crop is largely determined by weather.

The tomato crop, which is grown in gardens throughout Alabama and as a commercial crop on a smaller scale, seems to have suffered more than any other. Heavy losses due to sunburn or scald are reported. Dr. C. L. Isbell, horticulturist at Auburn, made a careful investigation and his findings verified the information received from other sources.

Other truck and garden crops were damaged because the majority of these are affected immediately by exceptional weather. Ample moisture is required by them and where torrid weather comes on top of a lack of adequate moisture in the ground damage is done. Pastures, too, have suffered. Abundant growth of pasture crops requires plenty of water. On the other hand, torrid weather not only retards growth but also parches pasture plants.

The fruit crop over the state is spotted. The same is true of pecans. County agents say that where peaches and apples have been sprayed a fair crop is expected. In a few counties the fruit crop is reported to be especially good, whereas in others a very poor crop was set in the spring and small yields are being made.

Only a fraction of the normal pecan crop has been set. Like other crops in season, its development will be measured by summer and early fall weather.

Chilton County: C. E. Stapp, county agent, says that cotton is improving but it is late. Rapid growth during the week was reported by him.

Child Of Four Has Close Call In Car Driving Attempt

Double Springs, Ala., June 29.—Ambitious to be an automobile driver, Mary Katherine Dodd, 4, attempted to operate her father's car here Saturday and barely escaped serious injury when the machine sped down hill on a mad run after the tiny girl had released the clutch.

Mary stayed with the automobile as it sped down the road, crashed through a fence, rolled over a log and finally stopped by plunging into the bank of the road.

She was found, crying, in the bottom of the car, where she had been knocked after striking the gear lever. She was not seriously hurt.

The automobile had been left in gear at the top of a hill near her home by her father, Lee Dodd, the parent said Sunday. Mary climbed into the machine when Mr. Dodd was not watching, and before he could stop her, had the car running wildly down hill.

JUDGE B. M. MILLER

Candidate for Governor

Questions fairness of STRAW VOTE of Birmingham News and AGE-HERALD

ON JUNE 15, 1930, the Birmingham News and Age-Herald proposed a straw ballot for the offices of United States Senator, Governor and Lieutenant Governor. On June 19, the following statement was presented to the News and Age-Herald:

"To the Birmingham News and Age-Herald:

If Governor Graves should propose a test vote in the present campaign for governor, the public would question whether or not his personal interest in the same were too great to permit a fair result. In such a proposed test vote he would receive and count the votes and as a result his position would be like that of a judge in a court who tries a case in which he is interested.

While the News and Age-Herald have taken no public position editorially in the campaign for governor it is well known that in their policies they favor the nomination of Governor Davis. The public is not unaware of the fact that Hon. Robert B. Evans is the counsel and political adviser of the News and that he is also one of the chief advisers of Governor Davis in his present campaign.

I, therefore, question the propriety of your undertaking the test vote. Due to the fact that your circulation reaches a limited number of voters who are located generally in the Birmingham district, the result of such a test could not indicate the views of a fair cross section of the state. In counting a large number of votes and in checking them against the lists of duly qualified voters in the county in which the voter lives, many members of your staff will of necessity learn the position of each voter. Many voters prefer to keep their ballots secret as the law provides. In spite of all the efforts with which you undertake to surround these ballots with secrecy it is not unreasonable to believe that with the campaign at this pitch such as the present one is, the results of many of these votes will reach Governor Davis' headquarters. As long as this test vote continues those who cast their ballots for other candidates than Governor Davis will run the risk of having their position disclosed. I am, therefore, requesting my friends and supporters not to engage in this test ballot.

B. M. MILLER."

The News and Age-Herald declined to publish this statement.

On June 20 Mr. John Miller, who is in charge of my headquarters in Birmingham, offered this statement to the News and Age-Herald as a paid advertisement.

The News and Age-Herald declined to publish this advertisement.

In a hotly contested election the ascertainment of the true expression of voters is not without difficulty even under the protection of the law.

In this proposed straw ballot voters cannot be identified nor their signatures verified.

Any partisan supporter who is so minded could clip hundreds of ballots from these newspapers and fill them in with the names of qualified voters in his county or elsewhere.

This proposed test ballot was instituted by the News and Age-Herald for a purpose either mercenary or political. If mercenary, it offers an opportunity for unfairness and places an inflated sale of daily papers above a spirit of fairness to candidates. If political, it wears an untrue mask of impartiality and is instituted to bolster up the waning candidacy of Governor Davis.

For the reasons set out in this statement I request that my friends and supporters do not engage in this proposed straw vote.

HAVE YOU PLANTED ANY HAY?

It is getting late to be planting, but one still has about 10 to 15 days in which to plant peas and soy beans for hay. I find many farmers in the county have planted no hay crop at all. There should be at least one acre of good hay for every mule and cow in the County.

$1.15 will buy sufficient amount of Laredo soy beans to drill one acre. Soy beans drilled, even this late, and given about two light workings will turn out lots of hay almost equal to alfalfa in feed value.

The little silvery herring which we call sardine comes from the coast of Maine.

We do not serve this delightful little fish often enough to learn of the number of dishes which it may add to our list of good things. How about a rarebit? Everybody likes rarebit.

Sardine Rarebit.—Mix two tablespoonsful of melted butter with half a pound of rich cheese grated or broken into bits. Stir constantly while it melts, then add one egg beaten and diluted with two-thirds of a cupful of cream. Stir until smooth, season with paprika, a small pinch of salt and a few drops of tabasco sauce. Drain a box of sardines, broil them on slices of toast and pour over the hot rarebit. Serve at once.

One may buy the sardines put up in oil, or in tomato sauce, or "done" in mustard, so all tastes may be served and given a variety.

Curried Sardines.—Mix one teaspoonful each of sugar and curry powder, adding a pinch of salt. Put these into a saucepan with one cupful of cream and a teaspoonful of lemon juice. Stir until hot, then drop in a dozen sardines. In another pan heat some butter, and in it saute slices of bread large enough to hold a sardine and a slice of apple. Pour some of the hot apple sauce over each and Sardine sandwiches are probably the most popular way of serving this little fish, next to serving them as they come from the tin, with a bit of lemon and bread and butter. How would you like to try:

Sardines on Toast.—This is a most delightful dish for Sunday night supper or in fact for any day in the week. Put two tablespoonsful of butter in a saucepan, add two tablespoonsful of flour, stir until smooth and browned slightly, then add a half cup-

Dainty Way to Serve Berries

You thought of having strawberry shortcake for dessert—but there wasn't time to make any sort of foundation for it—either sponge cake or biscuit dough, and yet you have plenty of whipping cream, and unusually fine berries. Try this suggestion from the bureau of home economics:

1 quart selected $\frac{1}{2}$ tsp. salt ripe strawberries $\frac{1}{2}$ cup or more plait double powdered sugar

Wash the berries well, drain, and cap. Whip the cream until stiff, add the salt and sugar, and continue the whipping until all are well blended. Fold the berries carefully without crushing them into the cream until each berry is coated. Serve at once. If the berries stand after combining with the cream, the juice is likely to be drawn from them and the cream thinned.

How to Do "Needle Painting"

By JULIA BOTTOMLEY

ladies of the court to have some famous artist paint quaint pictures on linen, they in turn adding a few cunning touches of embroidery.

It is now possible to buy in art needlework sections lovely printed-out linen pictures (7 by 9 inches) which are that exquisite they look like original watercolor sketches. Several of the subjects available are reproduced in miniature in the illustration. Of course in this black-and-white newspaper print the beauty of the actual coloring of these pictures has to be left to the imagination.

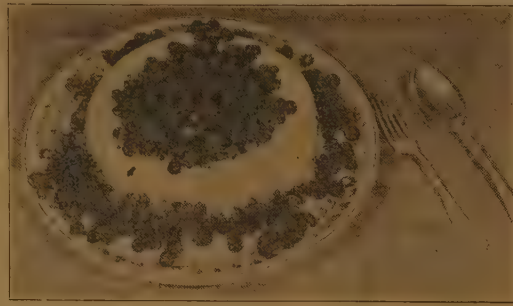

Very few instructions are necessary. You can do as little or as much on embroidery as you wish. Just a few stitches impart a feeling of being handmade, a feature which ever endears and glorifies a gift in the eyes of the recipient.

The quaint Godey's Fashions, 1800, never fails to make an instantaneous hit. Perfectly "dainty" to hang in a young girl's boudoir. The diagram in the upper left corner of the illustration indicates type of stitching employed and their placement. For the English garden scene and other landscapes, the hollyhocks are worked with stitches as sketched in lower right corner, the daisies in "lazy-daisy" stitch, while the bird of brilliant plumage is high-lighted with long and short stitches.

After the embroidery is completed, press with warm iron on wrong side. Lay it on the cardboard which comes with the frame of glazed ebony with black enamelled (gold stenciled) mat which has been especially designed for these needle painted water-color pictures. By the way there's nothing smarter in the way of frames than those all in black. They contrast the bright colors of the picture with consummate artistry.

Vanilla Mousse With Fresh Fruit

A Mold of Plain Vanilla Mousse With Raspberries or Other Fruit in Season.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

One of the oldest and easiest desserts you can plan for a special occasion is a plain vanilla mousse with fresh fruit in its season—strawberries, raspberries, peaches, blackberries, or other fruits that are good when eaten with cream. The illustration shows a molded mousse served with fresh red raspberries.

The bureau of home economics gives the following recipe for plain vanilla mousse. Leaflet 40, "Ice creams frozen without stirring," also suggests many other ways of varying the flavor of a plain mousse.

1 cup double cream $\frac{1}{2}$ tsp. sugar
1 cup rich milk or $\frac{1}{2}$ egg whites
1 tsp. cream $\frac{1}{2}$ tsp. salt
1 tsp. vanilla $\frac{1}{2}$ tsp. vanilla

Soak the gelatin until soft in a little of the milk or thin cream. Heat the remainder, and pour over the gelatin. Add the sugar and stir until dissolved, and put the mixture aside to chill. Whip the double cream. When the mixture containing the gelatin has thickened slightly, beat it to incorporate air. Add the vanilla and fold in the whipped cream and well-beaten egg whites. The egg whites reduce richness, increase volume and improve texture. These proportions will make over four cups before freezing, or, if the egg whites are not used, about three cups.

Instead of the gelatin as thickener, you may prefer to moisten one tablespoonful of flour with a little of the milk or thin cream; add to the remainder, heat to boiling and combine with the whipped cream and other ingredients. Or prepare a custard from the cup of rich milk, three egg yolks and the sugar. Cool, beat and add to the other ingredients as described. Or add one-fourth cup of marshmallows cut in small pieces to the milk or thin cream and follow the usual method.

Mousse made by the above basic recipe may be frozen by packing in ice and salt without stirring, or in a mechanical refrigerator. If packed in ice and salt, the container for the mixture should not be too thick. Large baking powder cans are good for small quantities, or fancy molds may be used. Since the mold must be buried in the ice and salt, seal the opening with a tightly drawn strip of cloth which has been dipped in paraffin or some fat with a high melting point, so that the salty water cannot leak in. Use about three parts of crushed ice to one of salt and let stand for several hours, depending on the shape and size of the mold.

HINTS TO HOUSEKEEPERS

Even charming clothes depend upon the posture of the wearer for their effectiveness.

Make breakfast more interesting by the occasional addition of chopped dried fruit to muffins or cereal.

A Turkish towel pinned to one end of the ironing board is useful in pressing garments with embroidery or buttons.

Extra rhubarb or strawberry juice left during canning may be canned in jars by itself for later use in jelly, summer fruit ices and beverages, pudding sauces or gelatin desserts.

and continuing on to the southeast will show you the great Dog Star, Sirius. He's the brightest star, and that's where we're going now. You see we're wandering about a good deal as we make our visits."

"I've heard about that dog star," Harry said. "I've something to ask him."

"Ask it by all means. Here we are."

A folding screen is often part of the sewing equipment. It may be used either to cut off the view of disorder

Pockets for Patterns on Screen in Sewing Room.

If the work must be hurriedly stopped, or for protection during fitting, it often serves as a place on which to pin up partly finished work and various ways have been devised of making such a screen hold small sewing accessories. When not wanted the screen is folded up and put away.

One use of this kind is shown in the picture, taken by the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture. Pockets similar to shoe bags were made on a width of material as large as two panels of the screen. Osmaburg, a durable and inexpensive household cotton fabric, was used for the 30 panted pockets hung on the screen. Patterns and findings are then stored in a very handy way within reach of the person working at the sewing machine.

Lesson for July 6

ABRAHAM, A PIONEER OF FAITH

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 12:1-3; 13:1-12; 14:14-16; 17:1-8; Heb. 11:8-10

GOLDEN TEXT—By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive, for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out, not knowing whither he went.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Pleasing God by Obedience.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Abraham, the Pioneer.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Pioneering in an Unknown Country.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—A Man Who Found Friends With God.

I. Abraham's Call (12:1).

Abraham's ancestors were idolatrous. God came unto him in Ur of the Chaldees and said unto him:

1. "Get thee out of thy country, thy kindred, and all that thou hast, and I will make thee a great nation."
2. Get thee out "from thy kindred." He was not only to leave behind his native land, but his relatives, well. His kindred being idolaters, he must separate himself from them.
3. "Into a land that I will show thee." He was not told what or where the land was.
4. God's Covenant with Abraham (12:2, 3; 17:1-8).

1. What God promised to Abraham:

- (1) To make him the father of a great posterity (v. 2). This has been literally fulfilled. (2) To make him a great nation (v. 2). No name in all history equals that of Abraham in his honorable influence. It is revered among Jews, Mohammedans and Christians. They all acknowledge him as father.
- (3) A blessing to others (vv. 2, 3). He was not only to become great and share God's blessings, but to be a blessing to others.

2. The land given unto him (17:8).

Although Abraham was a pilgrim, he was permitted to sojourn in the land. The land itself was given to his son Isaac. God's chosen and most favored nation. The nation to which He came nearest and gave most, in order that it might pass on its goodness to the other nations of the world, was given the most strategic position in the earth.

While the Hebrews have failed in the fulfillment of their divinely appointed task and the world is in debt because of it, they shall go back to their old land and fulfill their divinely appointed task.

III. Abraham's Generous Treatment of Lot (13:1-12; 14:14-16).

While Abraham sojourned in Egypt, having gone there because of famine in Canaan, he grew rich in worldly goods. Because of his devotion to the king, he was thrust out of Egypt when the truth became known.

1. Abraham and Lot separate (13:1-12).

Seeing that their temporal relations would engender strife and prove quarreling, and knowing the disastrous effect upon the heathen round about Abraham gave Lot his choice. Though Lot owed everything to Abraham, his selfish heart moved him to grasp for the best, and his decision ultimately brought him to grief. He prospered for awhile, but eventually not only his goods, but he himself and his family were taken away by the confederate kings who came against Sodom.

2. Abraham delivers Lot (14:14-16).

Though Lot's trouble was the fruit of his own sowing, Abraham's magnanimity of soul moved him to take up arms and deliver Lot from the oppressor. While Lot suffered from his selfish choice, Abraham prospered.

IV. Abraham's Faith (Heb. 11:8-10).

1. Its source (v. 8).
2. The word of God. Faith takes God at His word.
3. Its practice (v. 9, 10).

Abraham never settled down, even in the land of promise. He was a true pilgrim. He was content to pass through the land because his eyes were fixed on "a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

V. Abraham Tested (Heb. 11:17-19).

At the command of God he offered up Isaac (v. 17).

He went out from the country in obedience to God. He laid down his son on the altar in obedience to God.

2. The promise of blessing was wrapped up in Isaac (v. 18).

The promise involved this particular child, not just any descendant.

3. The supreme venture (v. 19).

He so completely trusted God that he went all the way. He believed that God would raise up Isaac from the dead in order to make good His promise.

One of His Heroes

Sanitation Is Way
To Quality Cream

Auburn, Ala., July 3.—High-grade cream can be produced even in hot summer weather if proper attention is given to cleanliness, according to Prof. A. D. Burke, head of the dairy department of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute. He said that sanitation is the keynote.

"This sanitation begins at the cow," he said. "A cow is clean when the long hairs have been clipped from the udder, flanks, and switch of the tail, and when sile has been brushed and her udder wiped with a damp cloth before milking."

Professor Burke mentioned that a clean barn and barnyard and the use of a covered pail are essentials. "Another most essential point," he continued, "is clean, dry utensils, with emphasis on the word dry."

In washing utensils he says that it is important to scald and rinse with boiling water for two or three minutes and invert the utensils in a clean place free from dust to dry. Some make the mistake of using a cloth to dry cans and pails.

Three other things which help in producing high-quality cream are washing the separator immediately after each use, making the cream test about 40 per cent butterfat, and keeping it cold. For cooling cream the Auburn expert suggests the use of a barrel for the cream cans in a sheltered, shady spot where water from a pump may be circulated about the cans each time the pump is operated.

BROWN'S UNUSUAL RECORD

Senator Watt T. Brown, of St. Clair County, Democratic National Committeeman, and who is announced in this issue as a candidate for governor in the August primary, has a most unusual record in politics in that he has never been defeated at the polls. He has been at various times alderman, mayor, registrar, Democratic county chairman, member of the lower house of the legislature, state senator (three terms) and National Democratic Committeeman. He won the latter post in the primary two years ago when presidential politics was uppermost in the state. The main features of Senator Brown's platform are given in another column.

ELECTRICITY
Costs Less Than Even Mule Power

STRANGE as it seems — the Alabama mule — long regarded in the South as the cheapest worker on the farm, has been revealed as an expensive source of power in comparison with economical, dependable, efficient electric current.

The difference in the cost of ELECTRIC POWER as now used on Alabama farms and the corresponding amount of ANIMAL POWER that would be required to do the same amount of work is $3,500,000 annually.

As shown by a farm power survey made by the United States Department of Agriculture, mule power costs, on the average, SEVEN AND A HALF TIMES AS MUCH as electric power on Alabama farms.

Bulletin 1343, giving the results of this survey, shows that the average cost of WORK ANIMALS on farms in Alabama is 28 cents per horse-power hour.

The average cost of ELECTRICITY on farms in Alabama is only 3.6 cents per horse-power hour.

Alabama Power Company service to rural customers is expanding rapidly. During the first half of 1930, the company added 53 new rural lines, bringing the total number completed to 469.

Twenty-four more lines were projected and approved and will be completed during the remaining months of this year.

By the end of 1930 Alabama Power Company will have brought the benefits of electricity to more than 23,000 rural customers, including those in small communities of less than 1,000 population.

Pension Warrants Off To $409,035

Montgomery, Ala., July 1.—A total of 5,515 Confederate pension warrants were mailed out to probate judges in Alabama's 67 counties yesterday for distribution by State Auditor S. H. Blum. This is a decrease of 153 since April 1. Pensions for the July quarter amount in all to $409,035, compared to $423,150 for the preceding quarter.

On April 1 there were 1,221 Confederate Veterans on the pension rolls, compared with 1,147 for the July quarter; a decrease of 74. Veterans are in pension class A and draw $150 a quarter. Widows in Class 1 drawing $75 per quarter, totalled 1,782 on April 1. For the July quarter this number was increased by four.

There were 1,760 widows in Class 2, drawing $45 per quarter, on April 1. Since then this number has been decreased by 55. On April 1 a total of 485 widows in Class 3 drawing $30 per quarter was shown. This total has now decreased to 877.

15,000 T. B. Cases Believed In State

Dr. Baker Estimates Prevalency Of Disease on Eve of Campaign Against It

There are between 15,000 and 20,000 cases of tuberculosis in Alabama, Dr. J. N. Baker, state health officer, estimated Monday in announcing further plans for the State's anti-tuberculosis campaign which will get underway within a few weeks.

Dr. Baker stated that it was the aim of the State Health Department to locate and with the aid of the county health agencies and physicians in the counties, to help as far as possible persons who have tuberculosis.

The first object will be to find the victims and make accurate diagnoses of their conditions, and for this purpose the services of a trained chest expert will be obtained.

Dr. Baker returned Monday from a trip to Detroit and Virginia, where he studied the anti-tuberculosis work in that city and State.

Lynchings Mount, Dr. Moton Reports

First Half of 1930 Shows Increase Over Same Period in 1929

Dr. R. R. Moton, principal of the Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute, yesterday announced the lynching record for the first six months of 1930. His announcement follows:

"I send you the following information concerning lynchings for the first six months of this year. I find according to the records compiled at Tuskegee Institute in the Department of Records and Research that in the first six months of 1930 there were nine lynchings. This number is five more than the number for the first six months of 1929; four more than the number for the first six months of 1928 and is the same as the number for the first six months of each of the years 1925, 1926 and 1927; it is four more than the number for the first six months of 1924; six less than the number for the first six months of 1923; 21 less than the number for the first six months of 1922 and 27 less than the number for the first six months of 1921.

"Of the persons lynched, one was white and eight were Negroes. The offenses charged were rape, five; murder, one; bombing house, one; slaying landlord in altercation over debt, one; attempted rape, one.

"The states in which lynchings occurred and the number in each state are as follows: Florida, one; Georgia, one; Mississippi, one; Oklahoma, one; South Carolina, two; Texas, three."

VERBENA WILL STAGE 'ALWAYS IN TROUBLE'

Will Be Second Performance Of Play; First Received Much Approval

Wednesday evening, July 2, "Always in Trouble," a 3-act comedy drama, was staged at Verbena in the high school auditorium. The play met with such a reception and was so admirably performed that it was decided to show it again on the evening of Thursday, July 10, at the same place. Admission will be only 10 and 25 cents.

It could easily be said of the fine performance by each individual actor that they were all doing their part, but the statement that the rendering of the various roles was easily the best of any other past performances in Verbena. This is in itself quite an accomplishment for any group of actors, and the past many fine plays have been pronounced successes.

"Always in Trouble" takes its name from the various predicaments in which the lead actor finds himself, interacting with a nice little plot of a man's distress being sought by a son-in-law being the point on which a home-downer rests. Dances, clogs, choruses add interest and color, ending out an evening of splendid entertainment.

Words of the past performance, as from that to be given Thursday evening, July 10, are to be applied to the Methodist paragon. We are assured of a good evening's entertainment. Come to the show; enjoy a comfortable seat in a large cool auditorium, and laugh and forget the day. Remember, prices just 10 and 25 cents.

The Board will meet on the last Friday in this month for the purpose of considering transportation and anyone wishing to bid on any route may send their bid to me on or before Thursday, July 24th. Of course if one comes early enough Friday, July 25th, it may be presented at that time but it would have to be done before the Board opens the bids on the respective routes.

"It is the wish of the Board to furnish transportation where necessary but at the same time they wish to eliminate all possible expense in every phase of our school program. In view of this let me urge that the entire citizenship of the county cooperate with us and we would be very glad if you would not ask for transportation except in those instances where it is absolutely necessary."

CLANTON NEEDS A LANDING FIELD, FLIGHT LIEUT. SAYS

"That place called Clanton sure needs a landing field," was probably the thought that entered the mind of Lieut. Fish, when he flew to Clanton Tuesday to visit Lieut. and Mrs. D. A. Crandell, of the Naval Air Service, who are confined to the Central Alabama Hospital here, as the result of an automobile accident near Verbena recently.

Lieut. Fish flew over Clanton and vicinity several times, in search of a landing place for his plane, and finally giving up, went on to Montgomery, where he was directed to fly back to Verbena, where there is a small field suitable for landing. He landed there and came here by auto. One of the Commanders from the Naval Air Service also flew to Clanton Tuesday to visit Lieut. and Mrs. Crandell, and was forced to land elsewhere. There is no way of really telling how many prominent visitors Clanton is missing by not having a landing field here for planes.

OVERFLOWING WELL LOCATED NEAR ISABELLA

Well Poured Out 60 Gallons Water Per Minute When First Dug

One of the many interesting and valuable things of Chilton County has been brought to the attention of the News by G. G. Williams, of this place who wrote a letter describing an overflowing well, which is located on the farm of J. W. Suite, who lives one-half mile southeast of the Isabella Community which is about fifteen miles west of Clanton.

In his letter, Mr. Williams stated that Mr. Suite had tried for some time to dig a well which would supply a suitable amount of water for his home. He had two or three wells dug, but the water was unsuitable for use, and finally decided to have a well bored. The services and equipment of a Mr. Nelson of Thorsby, Alabama were secured to do the work.

After the work of boring the well was started and a depth of sixty feet was reached, it was thought that overflowing water could be found at a depth of seventy-five feet. At the latter depth the expected results were realized. The water was, at first, run through a three inch pipe and the output was estimated at sixty gallons per minute, but later the three inch pipe was replaced with a one and one-half inch pipe which reduced the output to approximately thirty gallons per minute.

The letter from Mr. Williams went on to state that the family and neighbors are happy and thankful for the splendid well of water. The well forces the water to a height of about nine or ten feet above the ground through the pipe. Mr. Suite has installed fixtures in his home so that he may have running water there, as well as in his barn and yards. Mr. Williams stated that one will not regret a trip to see this well, as it is said to be the only overflowing well in Chilton County.

Baptist Men's Class To Have Picnic, July 17th

The long-looked-for picnic of the Mens Bible Class of Clanton Baptist Sunday School will be held Thursday afternoon, July 17, at the new Ferry below Mitchell Dam. All men who were enrolled in the class during the special attendance campaign of last quarter, are invited and expected to attend. The pastor of the church and all other men who are officers of the Sunday School are invited.

All who expect to go are requested to meet at the church at 2:30 in the afternoon, from where the trip will be made to the picnic grounds.

Detailed arrangements are being worked out by a number of committees which have been appointed for that purpose. A committee will provide for the refreshments; another for the entertainment features; and another is to secure the fish to feed the crowds. Besides fish, the list of eatables will also include barbecued chicken.

This bids fair to be one of the best outings of this summer, and every man who has his name in the pot will surely be sorry if he fails to be on hand to get his part of the fun, the entertainment, and the eating.

The cemetery at Macedonia is in need of some cleaning work and all who are interested are requested to meet there on Friday, July 18th, for the purpose of cleaning the place off. Bring necessary tools to do the work.

Travels Far to Observe Eclipse

Bevan P. Sharpless, a young scientist of the Naval observatory at Washington, has started on a 7,300-mile journey to the tiny island of Nihoa, where he will observe and photograph a total eclipse of the sun which will last only 1.9 minutes. The photograph shows him at work at the observatory preparing for the trip.

First Picture of Waterspout

Washington.—An airplane has flown rings around a waterspout, permitting the recording of the first still and motion pictures ever made from the air of this awe-inspiring phenomenon.

The photographs of the twisting column of water and vapor were made between Miami and Havana by the seaplane survey party of the National Geographic society which is making a comprehensive aerial study of the geographic features and weather conditions along the east coast flying routes between North and South America.

Frederick Simplex, in charge of the party, describes the unusual experience in a communication to the society's headquarters here.

"Roaring across the sea from Key West to Cuba," he writes, "the giant flying boat 'Argentina' was almost in sight of Havana when a heavy rain squall suddenly blew up to starboard. Pilot Hawkins, to avoid the angry black cloud, veered to port. Then, to our amazement, there quickly dropped from the north end of the storm cloud the thin, writhing black column of a waterspout. In a few seconds, as we watched, it grew to a black, whirling corkscrew at least 600 feet high and probably 50 feet or more in diameter.

"At first glimpse of the ominous natural phenomenon Jacob Gayer, staff photographer, and Capt. Albert W.

Stevens, noted army parachute jumper and aerial picture man, seized cameras and made for open ports. Calling Pilot Hawkins through his speaking tube, Stevens asked him to circle the spout, approaching as closely as safety would permit.

"A sinister, frightful-looking monster the spout had now become, like a giant factory chimney linking the heavens with the sea. Then, as it grew in size and whirled and twisted, it took the shape and appearance of a great snake, spray and mist rising in clouds from where its tail lashed the sea. Yet its writhing edges were as clean-cut as a broad band of black ribbon.

"All day the sky had been overcast, the sea calm, the air supercharged with moisture. It was from a particularly black, low-lying cloud that the great spout had developed; and, as we flew round and round it, Gayer and Stevens made a series of pictures. First they shot the straight, dark descending line that marked the monster's formation; then its great twisting black bulk; and, finally, a long, grayish snakelike arm that swung off at 45 degrees—its lower end now whipped into thinning waterstrands like the frayed tail of a colossal horse. By my watch, it was exactly seven minutes from the time the spout first formed until it faded into the black depths of the moving squall. Twenty years ago my tramp steamer in the China seas ran from a waterspout. Now, in a plane that could fly 127 miles an hour, we impudently played tag with one—and took its picture!

"Whizzing over Morro castle we landed in Havana harbor in a tropical downpour, to find crowds of Cubans in sheltered places along the waterfront excitedly discussing the 'cyclone.' 'The only way to stop one,' said an excited customs inspector, 'is to shoot it!'

"But for this amazing prank of nature, our air cruise from Washington down to Havana was without adventure. Down the Potomac the ship had down, past Arlington and Mount Vernon basking in a Sunday morning sun. Above the battle fleet at Hampton Roads, past Norfolk and out to sea—with the so-called Great Dismal Swamp stretching far to the west. A vast, dark blue and mysterious waste it is, seen from the air, with here and there what seems to be cleared and cultivated areas.

"Towns, lighthouses, islands, rivers and estuaries slipped before the watchful eyes of our cameras. Wilmington, Charleston, Savannah, Jacksonville, lay along the path of the ambitious aerial survey which began at Anacostia Naval base and will end in the Argentine."

Confesses Big Art Swindle

Paris.—Charles Millet, grandson of the painter of "The Angelus," has confessed to selling for tens of thousands of dollars to London and New York art dealers pictures falsely attributed by him to his grandfather and other great artists.

The whole collection of Millets in the famous Barbizon museum, states Charles Millet, are also forgeries.

The paintings were made for him by a skillful copyist named Cazeau.

The investigations which brought this vast swindle to light began a few days ago. An art dealer in London applied through the Melun magistrates for the return of several genuine bronzes by Rodin which he had confided to Millet for sale and for which he had received no payment.

Police raided Millet's house in the Forest of Barbizon, where his famous grandfather had lived and worked. After a severe interrogation, Millet confessed that for years he had been exporting, principally to England and America, paintings guaranteed by him to be the works of Millet, Monet, Degas, Corot, Cezanne, Sisley and other Impressionist masters of the last century.

The works sent to England and America were sold in some instances, it was understood, for sums exceeding $50,000.

A panic is growing in the Paris art market owing to the widespread nature of this scandal. Dubious paintings by the Nineteenth century masters are being obtained at astonishingly low prices. No fewer than 4,000 forged pictures have been sold to unsuspecting dealers and collectors, state the police.

Art experts are working tirelessly, visiting collections whose owners are anxious for reassurance regarding the true value of their treasures.

Sees Burden in Long Life

Rochester.—She has a far better chance than most persons to run off with the honor, but Mrs. Sophie Reich of 225 Gregory street doesn't want to be one of the select few who live to be one hundred.

Mrs. Reich recently cut a birthday cake with ninety-seven candles on it at a dinner party given her by her children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

While flowers and greetings poured in on her she told a reporter why it doesn't pay to live too long. "You get too stupid," she declared, adding:

"Once your faculties become imperfect you are a burden to your family, too, and I don't want to be that."

Mrs. Reich is small and dainty. The kind of old lady who looks well in a white bonnet, but she doesn't go in for that sort of thing. She was quick with a retort to every question. She doesn't need an ear trumpet and she walked about with as nimble a tread as if she were twenty.

She came to this country from Germany, a young woman of twenty-two. Mrs. Reich's husband, Christian Reich, died in 1891.

She was the guest of honor at an "old folks" service in St. Paul's Evangelical church, along with all members who are over sixty years of age. "Children of Life's Sunset Slope" was the subject of the sermon by the Rev. Elmer H. Hoefler.

SUPERSTITIONS

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

Sophie saw the new moon over her left shoulder the other night, and she has been restless and unhappy ever since. It never would have happened so if she had only realized that there was a new moon, but she had been busy, and the nights had been cloudy, and she had neglected to look at the calendar, and here she had done a thing that was sure to bring ill luck upon her. She was worried. Sophie is an intelligent girl, who has been to college, and she is not at all superstitious she avers, but to see the new moon over her left shoulder does just give her a chill. And why shouldn't it?

Simpkins has no superstitions either. He doesn't believe that if it rains on Easter Sunday we can expect rain on seven successive first days of the week. He would just as lief walk under a ladder as not, and black cats running across his path give him no cold chills. He laughs when anyone walks around his chair to bring himself good luck in a card game, but he knows perfectly well that if he doesn't plant his potatoes in the dark of the moon—or maybe it is the light of the moon; anyway it is one or the other—the crop will surely be a failure. You can believe it or not, but he has seen it happen too many times to give it no credence.

Gordon with his family rides out in his automobile every pleasant Sunday. He plays golf on occasion after he has been to the morning church service, but when his neighbor, who was behind with his spring work, finished sowing his oats on Sunday Gordon knew that the crop would be a failure, as it was. His own crop was no better, but there were other and sufficient reasons for his failure. When you do a thing like that you are sure to pay dearly for it later.

Drain gives laborious and careful attention to these imbecile chain letters that every one, I suppose, gets which purport to have been started by Colonel Lindbergh or President Coolidge or the Mayor of Pesotum, because he fears the calamities which are promised to those who break the chain and throw that sort of time waste into the discard. He doesn't see how it can bring disaster, but he is just a little afraid to risk it, though he asserts with real feeling that he is in no sense superstitious.

As for myself, I get no sensation excepting one of awkwardness when I spill the salt on the tablecloth—I always break the chain when asked to "write this message to nine of your friends" even though the king of England has initiated the menace, and I never expect anything to happen. If I were contemplating a second marriage, Friday or the thirteenth of the month or both together would not daunt me. When I start to do a thing and have to turn back, however, I always sit down; not because I am superstitious but just because it does seem a little safer.

With the Wall Flowers

By JANE OSBORN

A YOUNG man and a young woman in an evening dress stood in the shadows of the veranda of the brightly-lighted country club.

"You've got to promise before I go in," said the young man rather sharply. "I'm certainly not going to let you carry on the way you did the Bensons' last week."

"Well, I couldn't help it," protested the girl. "If the men are so foolish as to want to dance with me— isn't my fault. I should think I'd be proud of having a sister who wasn't a wall flower."

"Well, I wasn't proud of the way you carried on—eight or nine hanging around you all evening, a dozen girls sitting out every day. So I'm telling you right now that unless you promise you won't dance all so long as there are other girls sitting it out—promise you'll make men dance with the wall flowers, promise you'll show more concern for the shy young fellows that can't dance very well and don't know the girls, I'll take you home."

"Oh, all right," said the girl, with an indignant little toss of her head she went into the light that shone from the clubhouse. Her brother followed.

Bob and Nancy Crane were comparative new comers in the neighborhood. This was the first time that they had attended one of the country dances. Nancy was both very pretty and unusually fascinating—more so she danced divinely. One through dance after dance that night she sat at one end of the room—the music of the wall flowers. She sat talking first to this girl and then that, girls who habitually sat many dances for lack of partners, as she sat she frequently had to be as some venturesome young man and begged her to dance.

If the rejected young man would sit down beside her she would be the conversation general, sharing with the girl or girls beside her. Sometimes she would suggest to a young man whom she had met that he had better dance with one of the other girls not dancing, and was only when she had contrived to find partners for all the wall flowers that she felt free to dance herself.

A tall, slender young man seemed to have taken root among the wall flowers. Mr. Hill—Fred Hill—was his name. He had been brave enough to dance twice with enormous success. Sally was a nice girl and a jolly, but Sally weighed two hundred pounds. Then Fred Hill worried through a dance with a girl who said she had never danced once before. Later he contrived to talk through a dance with a girl who stammered.

Once when Nancy had somehow tried to provide the last wall flower with a partner Fred Hill would over to her, and, hardly looking at her, said in a tone of forced cheerfulness: "May I have this dance, please?" He presented himself as if it didn't matter at all. Then he looked at Nancy and realized how very pretty she really was.

"Funny little girl," Fred said to her after they had danced for a few minutes. "Sitting all alone with the wall flowers when you're the prettiest in the room—and the best dancer ever met."

When this dance was over Fred asked Nancy to go out on the veranda with him, and Nancy accepted. All she thought, he wasn't particularly popular. He had been dancing with the wall flowers—didn't seem to be any of the popular girls. Bob told her to be good to the shy man.

"Funny little girl," Fred said to her as he kissed her hand. "I see if I had known you always, I'm going to let you forget me, going to come and see you tomorrow and the next day and the next and every day after that."

"I'll tell you something funny," continued Fred. "My sister Alice has been belonging to this club for a long time. I've been coming to dances all summer and there are always a number of very popular girls of the sort that I'm always swarming around. I've always been one of the swarms. I never cared a rap for a girl who wasn't hotly pursued by at least a dozen other men. Well, one day Alice told me that it was Alice— the way all the men hung round a few popular girls and a lot of nice little girls had to sit out dances. Alice made me promise that night that I'd devote myself to girls who didn't have so much attention. Well, I thought they were hopeless. But Alice was right. I hadn't been over there with the wall flowers I wouldn't have found you."

Fred was holding Nancy's hand in his and bent and kissed almost solemnly. "Blessed little flower," he said—"I love you."

The next day began an intense sort of courtship and a week later Fred and Nancy were engaged. "I told Fred the quiet little girl who weren't so very popular really more worth while," Alice said. "And now he knows I was right."

Few Things Now Are Discarded As Worthless Waste Materials

Converting waste materials of field and forest and seemingly worthless by-products of industrial plants into useful and valuable products is one of the advanced steps taken by American industry. Once cotton seeds were used as fertilizer because they were considered worthless for other purposes. Now cotton seeds are almost if not quite as valuable as the lint cotton.

Not so very long ago corn stalks were destroyed after the corn and the fodder had been stripped from them. This is still done in many parts of the South, but great quantities of corn stalks are being utilized in the manufacture of paper in the corn belt of the West.

Even the pine stumps left after forests had been cut over for their timber now are being made to yield an income and serve agriculture and industry.

Over in Clinch County, Georgia, thousands of pine stumps are being salvaged in the cut-over timberlands for the manufacture of dynamite.

A huge stump-puller is employed for the work, extracting them much in the same manner of a dentist—then shaking them like the bull pup punishes a rat, the better to be rid of excess dirt.

The extracted stumps then are taken to Brunswick where, cleaned, they are reduced to finest sawdust, treated chemically, and converted into dynamite.

This stump pulling operation recently was brought to public attention by the Georgia State Department of Health, as an object lesson in how waste material may be employed to raise the health standards. For the dynamite then is used to blast away breeding holes of mosquitoes, carriers of malaria.

Very few things nowadays are worthless. Even the sawdust at saw mills is used profitably by industry and science. Things that once were regarded as worthless and only in the way are now being made to serve industry, business and agriculture.

Human Element In Flying

Announcement of a projected endurance flight in which fresh pilots will be provided at intervals, along with fresh supplies of oil and gasoline, indicates that the endurance flying business is about to get on a basis of modern business efficiency. When it reaches that stage the romantic interest will disappear and the chief incentive for such stunts will have passed.

The widespread interest that has been aroused by the feats of the tireless crews of the St. Louis and Chicago planes had its birth in popular appreciation of the virile qualities of daring men, not in the endurance of man-made machines, and when this element disappears gaping throngs no longer will watch the flights with bated breath.

Human interest centers in the achievements of human beings and interest wanes as the human element diminishes.

The farmer who has plenty of meat, lard, corn and syrup in his barns and smokehouse and a garden of fresh vegetables, a good milk cow and some chickens and eggs is not worrying much about where he will get something to eat. There is no excuse for people living on a farm not having all of these things unless some misfortune occurs. The first aim of every farmer should be to produce enough food for his family and enough feedstuffs for his livestock. He should if possible produce a surplus of these. Then after these requirements are met, he might give attention to the so-called money crops. Many farmers are up against the problem of feeding their families and livestock right now. They are having to hustle for all they are worth to meet the problem. A little foresight would have forestalled this situation. What are you doing this year to protect yourself from a similar predicament next year? Let us hope that our farmers will give more attention to provide these food crops.

R. J. Ball, Editor of the Loveland (Colo.) Reporter-Herald Says:

That the greatest, most dynamic force in any community is the modern, aggressive and progressive newspaper.

It is the mirror through which community activities, community progress and development, community industries, business and social life are reflected to the outside world.

It gives to the community an unselfish service, a service the value of which cannot be measured in dollars and cents, a service of benefit to even the most humble citizen, through constant and persistent effort to advance those things that mean most for community growth and development and the happiness and comfort of its citizens.

The independent press, not throttled by political bias, selfish greed, nor personal aggrandizement, fighting always for what is right and just and fair, with ever friendly consideration for the views and opinions of all classes of citizens, is the real power and guiding force that builds cities, makes for happy homes and a contented, wide-awake citizenship.

"The Home Town Paper," is a local institution in which every loyal citizen should be a stockholder—not through financial investment, but through the investment of good will and a spirit of helpfulness to the end its services may be enlarged and its usefulness gain added impetus.

A community is largely judged by the appearance, character and type of its newspaper, and should influence its business interests to do their full part in giving to their paper the volume of business essential to its success and the encouragement so necessary to keep it abreast the time in improvements and development.

"ROUND TOWN"

Opinions expressed in this column by this writer have no connection with the general policies of this paper, being wholly those of the writer, in the manner they are written.

"Clantonians, Let's Talk Clanton."

It was so hot today that I've decided that unless I change my mind, the next person who asks me if it's hot enough for me I am going to lose my untameable temper and then surrender to the sheriff.

In fact it was so hot that one of our suburban belles looked in a mirror down at the high school during the celebration Friday, and the rouge had begun to melt on her face and lips and was running slightly, and she thought she was bleeding to death. That might have been the reason one of Martin's ambulances answered a false alarm to the school house Friday afternoon.

And then again, I heard that the real reason for the ambulance call was that somebody said Charlie McCall had knocked Judge Miller out, and some fellow took it seriously and summoned an ambulance. Either way, Samuel Martin did answer a call to the school grounds but couldn't find anybody who wanted to ride.

You have often heard of "drug store cowboys," well, I think I have seen one, because the other night one of our drug store men drove into town and some limbs or vines of some kind were clinging to his car. Could be possible he had been out doing some rounding-up, but this is hardly the season that cowboys round up their heifers, so I'm told.

And so on down the street a little farther.

I come to Blalock's Store. There I take a look around and find a very neatly arranged grocery store. A new business for Clanton, worthy of patronage. Mr. and Mrs. Blalock come here from Lay Dam. Both seem to be real pleasant folks, the kind a person would like to know.

And then a wide jump up to the Miss-A-Putt Golf Links. Found there that the people are still knocking things around as usual and doing their best to put them in a hole. Funny, these humans, always knocking things around, and so on.

But anyway, Clanton can boast of a golf course now, if it is suitable for boasting. I haven't met the gentlemen who are operating the miniature links. Maybe they will look me up and invite me to come and play a game. I kind of like to knock things around a little myself.

I often wonder what is going to put up in the old post office building. What young lady made my friend, Dooker Pooker, so angry he will not write any more for me. Who sent that "Joke on Ben," to the editor from Verbena, and didn't sign their name. Why some people are so inquisitive. Why Tom Littlejohn is sore, in a friendly way, toward "Coose" Neighbors. Why a certain corner store here is so popular with certain men at night. What H. G. Boyd and N. S. Johnson think of Judge Miller now. What Eric Hart and Dr. Gowan think of Charlie McCall, now. Why Miller nor McCall did not mention all their opponents during their speeches here Friday. What Watt T. Brown was doing while Miller and McCall were here talking about each other. If I hadn't better put on the soft pedal about those things before somebody begins looking for me with one of those convincing arguments they carry in their pocket.

On up to the Capitol Dry Goods Store, where Reddie Taylor is putting on a great big July Clearance Sale, an announcement of which is in this week's issue of the C. G. N. with a full page ad. Reddie seems to be realizing that advertising in the News is advertising that gets the results.

And so on, across the street to the International Harvester dealer store where Mr. James O. Turner and Miss Maude Brandon hang their hat, and greet everybody with a winning smile. It makes a fellow feel great to walk into a place of business and the people there make him feel like he is welcome.

Next stop is a little further up the street, sorry to pass by the James Sign Shop, but Mr. James was not in, so on to Clanton Motors. Found out there that my good friend, "Sleepy" Miller met with an accident or something, and is now confined to his bed with a broken leg. I wish him a speedy recovery.

On my way back down the street, I stop at the Standard Oil Service Station. Found there Durwood Teel busily engaged in keeping the records straight, and his brother, J. L., doing his bit waiting on the trade. If the people of Clanton should work and stick together as well as these Teel brothers, it would sure be a fine thing for our town.

Stopped over at the Dixie. Mr. Easterling says that he is pleased with the compliments he receives from those people who are invited to be guests of the cafe, through the columns of the C. G. N. each week. Better look out for your name. You might be next.

Getting tired now, so on down to the office of the C. G. N. Passed by Mell Martin, who has just been elected as secretary-treasurer of the Alabama Funeral Directors Association. Clanton is justly proud, Mr. Martin, I am sure.

Frederick I. Thompson

concerning himself, his friends and those who are intimately associated with him labor under no such restraint. The public record in Alabama of Frederick I. Thompson, candidate for the United States senate, is an open book because it is so intimately related with the newspapers of which he has been publisher for nearly a quarter of a century and through which his views have been expressed. Since the opening of his campaign for the senate nomination, many requests have been received by writers on the newspapers published by him for some personal sketch—a sketch which would indicate something of his human traits, his interests in things aside from his newspaper enterprise, and his methods of conducting the newspapers published by him.

Frederick I. Thompson was born in Aberdeen, Miss., September 29, 1875, and began early to work in the newspaper office of his father, Captain Edward P. Thompson, gallant Confederate soldier, who served in numerous important battles with the famous Eleventh Mississippi regiment and was wounded at the Battle of Seven Pines. Fred Thompson's uncle, Jacob Thompson, was for many years a member of congress from Mississippi and was a member of President Buchanan's cabinet, resigning when Mississippi seceded from the Union. Jacob Thompson became inspector general of the Confederate army and occupied other confidential relations with his personal friend, President Jefferson Davis, through the civil war, and served in confidential capacities as the representative of the Confederate States congress.

Fred Thompson, as a boy, was personal witness to many of the evils of the post carpeting era and the fight to maintain a white primary system in Mississippi. His father was a leading spirit in that fight along with Private John Allen and other Confederate veterans of that Mississippi community.

Early Newspaper Work

When he was 17 years old, Fred Thompson became editor of the Aberdeen Weekly, serving in this capacity for four years. He then went to Memphis and became editor of the Weekly Commercial Appeal. Here he was in daily intimate contact with his uncle, W. J. Crawford, publisher of the Commercial Appeal and Edward W. Carmack, the brilliant and gifted Tennessee editor. When Thompson was 27 years old he was sent by The Commercial Appeal to represent that newspaper in New York, and there he remained for five years, becoming financially interested in that period in several southern newspapers and "Town and Country," a New York magazine. Determined to return to his native section he acquired the Mobile Register in 1910. Continuing success enabled him to become publisher of a number of other important Alabama daily newspapers and for many years his newspaper interests have been confined wholly to this state.

His talents and national reputation as a publisher resulted in his being elected a director of the Associated Press and his election to the vice presidency of that great news-gathering organization, having served for ten years in such capacities.

Selected By Wilson

In 1920 President Woodrow Wilson voluntarily, offered him appointment as a commissioner of the United States shipping board and in a telegram urging his acceptance said that "in such service by you I am assured there will be no thought of self-interest." In 1925 he resigned from the shipping board, four years before the expiration of his term, because President Coolidge was trying to deprive the South of representation on the board and Thompson wanted to be free to fight the proposal, "without," as he wrote President Coolidge, "having it construed that such opposition was prompted by self-interest in wishing to retain the office."

From the beginning of his newspaper career, Thompson has placed his publications at the service of the average citizen. Defense of the weak and helpless is a cardinal principle with him. A couple of years ago he was riding along an Alabama road with the writer and during the trip two or three forlorn and dilapidated school houses were passed. It was noted also that white boys and girls were out in the fields hoeing.

"In conducting a newspaper," he commented, "those are the people always to keep in mind. It makes no difference whether you are writing editorials on politics, social problems, taxation or anything else, always ask yourself the question: 'How does this effect these boys and girls out here in the fields?' They are the ones that need a friend all the time. It is a newspaper's first obligation to be of service to them, to help improve their condition and give them a fair chance in life. How any man can ride along these roads and these school houses and then object to adequate and just taxes is beyond my comprehension."

Attitude Toward Power Company Thompson's devotion to the welfare of the ordinary citizen is responsible for his attitude toward the Alabama Power Company and its sycophants who he feels are exacting unfair profits by exploiting small consumers of electricity who can not afford to be exploited. He has often said that "The Alabama Power Company is Alabama's greatest industrial asset, but its management is Alabama's greatest liability."

While he was on the shipping board in Washington an official of the Alabama Power company called him by telephone and demanded that a propaganda speech he had made be published in full in one of his newspapers because, said the official, "we are large advertisers and expect special consideration." The answer was a telegram to the office ordering all Alabama Power company advertising removed from the paper and instructing that the speech be handled strictly on its news merits.

A couple of years ago a representative of the Alabama Power Company sent a messenger to Thompson to say that unless his Mobile papers stopped their fight for lower electric rates in that city they would start another newspaper in Mobile and "put him out of business." Thompson's answer was just three words, and some adjectives, consigning the sender to warmer regions. All Alabama is now familiar with the outcome as revealed by the federal trade commission which disclosed an Alabama Power company official contributing $50,000, through roundabout channels to the starting of the Mobile Press, whose sole purpose, since its beginning, has been abuse and misrepresentation of Frederick I. Thompson.

He works hard and very intensely, but he frequently throws off business cares and responsibilities and gets his fly casting rod in action.

His Policy In Publishing

The intensity of his convictions and the vigor with which he defends them have made him some enemies in Alabama, but invariably such enemies can be found associated with some utility corporation or some selfish group which is seeking to exploit the public or to secure some kind of favored treatment or advantage at the hands of legislative or executive authorities. His own attitude and that of the newspapers published by him was indicated in his keynote speech in Montgomery when he declared: "For myself, whatever may have been the human errors of judgment, the policies of the newspapers published by me in Alabama for nearly a quarter of a century are an open book. I challenge Mr. Bankhead or any courtier in the same service, to review that record and find a single incident where privilege has been championed against public rights; to show where those least able to defend themselves and needing encouragement or support have failed to receive it in full and unstinted measure."

The scope and breadth of his personality have found striking illustration in the course of his intensive campaign over the state in connection with the senatorial contest.

Whether it be mingling with great crowds at the barbecue or community picnic; whether it be in a hall where working men meet; whether it be in a farmhouse where he stops for the night, whether it be before large gatherings or small he wins friends by his frankness, his sympathy and his understanding of the life and problems of the every day man.

He has set as his goal the task of seeing personally as many of the people of Alabama as it is possible for him to see before August 12, and those who have witnessed the warm and heartfelt response to his visits in various communities have no doubt of the outcome when the people go to the polls.

DIEF'S GIVES SERVICE ALONG WITH GOODYEAR PURCHASES

"Motorists are beginning to realize that they can simply go into a place and purchase a tire, or they can buy tire service," says Dief's Service Station, local Goodyear dealer.

"When purchasing an automobile, motorists have learned that it is good business to buy from a company that can give them good repair and upkeep service. Now they also are learning that it is just as important to purchase tires manufactured by a company that can back up their sales with good service."

"The Goodyear Company with its dealers in all parts of America, is in an excellent position to supply service to its tire users and makes a specialty of this important factor of the industry."

"The employees of my organization are taught to analyze the tire needs of our patrons and supply them with the tires best adapted for the conditions in which they will be required to serve. There is a Goodyear tire for every tire need."

"We will mount and inflate our patrons' tires; in removing old tires, will clean the rims and will be concerned to see that maximum service is given. We also will be glad at any time to inspect tires and change them from one wheel to another to give the user most to local health conditions. Dr. Baker spoke with the air of authority and wide experience when he said:

"A county health unit has been known to bring a degree of health to a county unbelievable in its excellence. The unit consists of an all time doctor who is experienced in health administration and in community problems. He is assisted by an all time nurse who examines school children for communicable diseases and aids expectant mothers. The sanitary inspector is a layman who receives special training. He keeps a watchful eye on water supply, malarial infestations, and general sanitary conditions in barber shops, drug stores, and public places. The fourth member of the corps is the secretary whose duties are to keep records and attend to office routine matters."

Doctor Baker then gave as the aim of a health unit to promote health. "Health," he said, continuing his earnest address, "has for its purpose to help make growth more rapid, life more vigorous, and death more remote." "Thomas Jefferson said: 'You cannot trust the people if you will educate them.' One of the aims of a county health unit is to educate the young and old alike in disease prevention."

Doctor Baker here made it emphatically plain that prevention was better than cure for most diseases. That it was better to lock the stable before the horse was stolen was given as a matter of economy and that a stitch in time saved more than the proverbial nine, was amply proved from his discussion.

In his discussion of soil pollution diseases, such as dysentery, and typhoid, he showed emphatically that health unit methods of combating would limit these troubles to a low degree, or entirely prevent them.

Such communicable diseases as smallpox, diphtheria, measles and mumps were named as troubles that could especially be held to a low rate of infection through the work of health units.

The need of publicity, public meetings, neighborhood clinics and community meetings as an aid in helping banish preventable diseases, were discussed. The importance of education in school and home was stressed as an aid to personal and public health education. Personal and public sanitation were given as great aids to better health. All these means were given as aids in banishing disease. The health unit was said to cost only a moderate amount of money. Four thousand dollars of this sum was given by the state and the remainder raised by the county.

There are at present over 50 health units in Alabama and it is the aim of the health department to increase this number until everyone of the 67 counties has an all time health unit. Alabama now has a greater percentage of its counties under a health unit than any other state in the Union. Its health ratio is very high and increasing.

Doctor Baker was anxious to extend the health service to Chilton and he received assurances that are long this county would join the great majority and reap the benefits from a public health system.

Health was said to consist of a sound body in a sound mind, and neither could exist without the other as a supplement. The Address of Health Officer Baker was well received by the large audience, fully 250 of whom stood in rapt attention during his address. The doctor met a large number of citizens following the luncheon and expressed himself as charmed with the hospitality of our citizens and the royal welcome given him by the citizens of Clanton and Chilton County.

"This service can be depended upon at Goodyear stations everywhere. The Goodyear Company also maintains up-to-date repair schools where dealers and their employees are taught the most modern and efficient methods of repairing all manner of injuries that tires can suffer. The user of Goodyear tires is never far from a convenient service station." Mr. Diefenderfer concluded.

Though cattle on the range should always be supplied with some salt, the amount needed depends partly on the feed available. Cattle need from 2 to 2 1/2 pounds a month on average range when the feed is succulent or when browse plants form the bulk of the forage. For the remainder of the season 1 to 1-2 pounds a month is enough. A fair allowance for a year-long range is about 20 pounds a head. There is less salt in plants when fresh and green than when dry, and less in browse forage than in grass and weeds.

Mrs. Velma Roberts and baby from Calera are doing well.

Miss Lillian Bowles is improving following an operation last week.

Lieutenant D. A. Crandell (Naval Air Service) and wife are improving. Both were severely hurt in a crash near Verbena.

Little Clara Mae Alred is rapidly recovering.

LOCAL FIREMEN ARE GIVEN ANOTHER SET-UP WEDNESDAY

When the local volunteer firemen met last week for their regular weekly meeting, they received another surprise when they were served in style with ice cream and cake by Mrs. M. A. Gore and Mrs. Earl Gore.

The fellows who are members of the fire department are beginning to believe that the people must think they really are worth something in their untiring efforts during fires in this vicinity, and they sure appreciate the various set-ups they have received lately.

Misses Lesta and Gladys Cobb and Mildred Rainey of near Jemison were in Clanton shopping last Tuesday.

South Clanton, Ala., July 9, 1930.
Editor News:

What have you got to say about the terrible spell of blistering hot weather that last week put over on us? My garden was a beautiful picture of what a little hard work and the beneficent smiles of a Wise Providence can do, when the torrid fire of old Sol turned its guns this way. The garden had just begun to deliver its luscious help to a very needy table when the end came. The place that knew those luxurious vegetables knows them no more and only the blistered and blighted remains of them now tell the story of what almost was a wonderful success.

All over this section spring gardens all went into the melting pot. Corn is badly hurt. Melons are cut off and we have only the hope of a second crop to look forward to. "King Cotton" is still in the ring, but very seriously wounded. July, they say, is when he has to do his stuff. If that is so, he will certainly have to get busy if he "gluts the market" this time, for he hasn't done a blame thing to brag about yet.

Mr. Henry Patterson, who is a successful farmer in the western part of the county, told me that the ubiquitous boll weevil had made his yearly arrival out in his community and was organizing rapidly for his campaign "to keep the crop down and the price up."

Just in time to be too late to save my garden, June went out in a copious shower. Wonder if July will treat us as dry and hot as June did.

A most delightful birthday party was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Van Smith Saturday night of last week in honor of their niece, Miss Marie Frasier.

Why Newspapers Ask For "EARLY COPY"

The Advertiser Is Unfair to Himself When He Habitually Sends His Advertisements to The Newspaper Office Just Before The Dead Line.

EARLY COPY	LATE COPY
Good Position No Errors Time For Corrections Good Typography Prompt Delivery to Reader Fair to Mechanical Staff Ads Well Written Advertisement Inserted Overhead Normal Illustrations Correct	Risk of Typographical Errors No Opportunity for Corrections Risk of Poor Typography Unfair Physical and Mental Strain Ads Hurriedly Written Risk of Omission Often Cause of Rate Increase Risk of Misplaced Cuts Risk of Poor Position

While a Newspaper is a Marvel of Mechanical Efficiency, there are limits on what can be done by a given force of printers, pressmen and mailers in a short Crowded period of Stress.

There is plenty of time to give every advertiser good service every week when Early Copy is sent in. But to set every advertisement in the last minute rush is impossible, even with a force five times as large.

TREATING DISEASE WITHOUT DRUGS

Article from J. B. Williams, D.C.; N.D.

Thousands are being won over to the drugless method of treating disease. The wide awake people are seeing every day those that have been cured by Chiropractic and other drugless methods that could not be cured by drugs, and are taking to the drugless methods.

Most of the patients I have are old chronic conditions that have been treated and treated by this doctor and the other doctor, but to no avail.

Chiropractic stands out as the leading method of restoring health to diseased bodies.

You well remember the great scourge (Flu epidemic) that swept the country in 1918-19. Chiropractic far excelled all other methods of healing. They lost one case in every 886. The medical way lost one in every 12 to 15 cases. There is your comparison. The drugless methods will excel in that proportion in all the common ailments of mankind. I have been practicing Chiropractic since 1916 and have later added many other drugless methods, and I've got my first case to lose with appendicitis, or either to have an operation performed. I've had three cases of appendicitis since I came to Clanton, and all have recovered almost as by magic.

Remember I treat all diseases, both acute and chronic in male and female. You will eventually be treated by the drugless way—why not now? Be healed now!

Respectfully yours,

The Mazaroff Mystery

by J.S. Fletcher

THE STORY

Mervyn Holt is engaged by a man calling himself Mazaroff as a traveling companion. After a short tour they put up at the Woodcock inn on Marrasdale moor. They meet, casually, Mrs. Elphinstone and Sheila Merclison. Mazaroff tells Holt they are his wife and daughter and that his real name is Merclison. That night Mazaroff falls to retire to the inn and his disappearance is unexplained. Holt meets Sheila and tells her of Mazaroff's disappearance. They go to her cousin's (Vernor Courtship) shooting box hoping to find some word of Mazaroff. There they meet Mr. Armistead and Doctor Eccleshare. Holt is questioned by Police Sergeant Manners and a reporter, Bowman. Mazaroff's murdered body is found. Crole, Mazaroff's lawyer, and Maythorne, private detective, arrive. Valuable diamonds that Mazaroff usually carried are missing. Mrs. Elphinstone scoffs at the idea that Mazaroff is Merclison and produces apparent proofs of his death. A gun, stolen from Musgrave, is found at the scene of the murder.

CHAPTER III—Continued

The scrap of paper was a receipt for a registered letter, dispatched from Cape Town, and addressed to the Imperial Banking Corporation of South Africa, 695 Lombard street, London. Maythorne pointed to the date—January 17—on the postmark.

"Nine months since," he remarked. "How long had Mazaroff been in England when you met him at the Cecil?"

"A few weeks," I replied. "As far as I know."

"I know," said Crole. "He came to England in July—about the end of the month."

"Then the letter, or packet, or whatever it was, to which this receipt refers, was sent off from Cape Town to the London branch of this bank some months before Mazaroff came here," observed Maythorne. He turned the receipt over. "There's an indorsement on the back—letters and a figure," he continued. "See? B. L. D. 1. What's that mean, I wonder?"

He carefully put away the receipt. "We'll just keep the knowledge of that to ourselves, for the present," he said. "If the police come here this afternoon, as they're pretty sure to, after that gun business, and want to examine his effects, let 'em. But I'll keep this scrap of paper to myself—I want to work things up from it."

The police came to the Woodcock a little later. They asked a lot of questions of Musgrave about his gun, and of me and of Webster about our movements on the night of the murder, of Crole about the dead man's identity and position; of me again about the money and valuables he was likely to have on him. And in the course of their investigations a fact came out of which I, until then, had been unaware. It turned out that after dinner on the night of the murder, while I was busied in writing some private letters, Mazaroff, who was naturally a sociable man, had strolled into the bar-parlor of the Woodcock, where a highly diversified assemblage had gathered—farmers, cattle dealers, drovers, filers, all homeward bound from Cloughthwaite fair. There he had made himself very agreeable, and had treated the entire company to drinks and cigars, which he paid for with a five-pound note, taken, said the barmaid, from a note-case that seemed to be pretty full, and in open view of anybody and everybody.

This bit of news appeared to give considerable satisfaction and even relief to the police officials, and Manners, who lingered behind when his superiors went away, found it impossible to refrain from communicating to me his belief that they were on the right line of pursuit.

I communicated the police sergeant's notions to Crole and Maythorne. Maythorne seemed to understand Manners' standpoint.

"Following the most probable line," he remarked. "A sensible one, too. Here's an evidently wealthy man, traveling in a luxurious car of his own, puts up at a roadside inn, goes into a public bar-parlor, lets it be seen that he's lots of money on him, and strolls out on a lonely moor after night has fallen. What more likely than that one of the men before whom he's just pulled out his purse should slip after him, murder him, and rob him?"

"With Musgrave's gun?" I asked.

"Nothing out of the way about that little detail!" said Maythorne. "What was easier than for the murderer to take down the gun from those hooks, and slip out after Mazaroff?"

"That would presuppose a knowledge that the gun was there," remarked Crole.

"Precisely," agreed Maythorne. "There were no doubt local characters about who know quite well what was in this room and what hung on that wall. I think Manners has got hold of a good theory—murder for the sake of robbery. But—whether it's the right one or not—um!"

"You doubt it?" I asked.

He gave us a candid, confidential smile.

"If you really want to know," he replied, "I neither doubt it nor agree with it. At present I don't know where we are. I'd like to know a lot of things yet. In particular—who was the man that Mazaroff said he wanted to see, hereabouts? Did he see him? If so, when—and where? If he hadn't seen him, was he on his way to see him at the time of the murder? Again—does this man, whoever he is, know Mazaroff as Mazaroff or as Merclison? Was Mazaroff murdered as Mazaroff, an unknown man here, or as Merclison, a man who had been known here?"

"Ah!" muttered Crole. "My question!"

CHAPTER IV

The York Solicitor

The inquest was duly opened next morning. Crole, as a solicitor whom he had employed in London, and I, as his traveling companion, identified the dead man as Salim Mazaroff, and told what we knew about him: Eccleshare and the local doctor testified as to the cause of his death; the men who had found the body at Relver's den gave evidence as to the circumstances under which they came across it. At this stage an interruption came through the entrance of Mr. and Mrs. Elphinstone and Sheila, with whom appeared an elderly man of professional bearing; Manners, by whom I was sitting, whispered to me that this was Mr. Wetherby, Mrs. Elphinstone's lawyer.

Wetherby lost no time in letting the authorities know why he and his party were there.

He said, addressing the coroner, "I wish to make an application to you on behalf of my client, Mrs. Elphinstone, of Marrasdale tower. To support it, I shall have—very briefly—to refer to some past history. Mrs. Elphinstone, as Miss Jean Linton, was married, some twenty-three or four years ago, to a Mr. Andrew Merclison, who formerly had some connection with this neighborhood. The marriage was not a success, and to put matters plainly, Merclison, within a comparatively short time and after making due provision for his wife, deserted her, and it was believed, went off to the East. Eight months after he had gone, Mrs. Merclison had a daughter—the young lady whom you now see here, Miss Sheila Merclison. Merclison was never heard of again until some years later, when Mrs. Merclison received news that he had been drowned off Mombasa, on the East African coast, while on a voyage from Bombay to Durban. From that time forward Mrs. Merclison believed herself a widow, and in due course she married again, and became Mrs. Elphinstone. Now I come to the cause and reason of my application. Yesterday, Mrs. Elphinstone was visited by two gentlemen now present, who have, I understand, just given evidence—Mr. Holt and Mr. Crole. On the invitation of Mr. Crole, Mr. Holt informed Mrs. Elphinstone that on the second evening after he and Mr. Mazaroff arrived here at the Woodcock, Mr. Mazaroff told him that though he had a perfect right to the name he was now known by, having legally adopted it some years ago, he was in reality the Andrew Merclison who had married Miss Jean Linton, and had left her. I need hardly say, sir, that this is a very serious matter for my client, and I think it will be well for all parties to view the body of this dead man, in order that she may see if she can recognize it as that of Andrew Merclison."

"That seems, obviously, the very thing to do," agreed the coroner. "Perhaps you'll accompany your client, Mr. Wetherby?"

There was considerable hushed excitement in that room during the absence of Mrs. Elphinstone and her solicitor. Some of the older folk amongst the spectators whispered—the name Merclison had evidently roused sleeping memories.

When Mrs. Elphinstone, followed by Wetherby, reappeared, at the coroner's suggestion, she went into the witness box and gave evidence. It compressed itself into this—she could not identify the dead man as Andrew Merclison. Had the features remained unaltered, she said calmly, she might have done so, but as things were—impossible!

Crole, in his professional capacity, rose to ask Mrs. Elphinstone a question.

"Mrs. Elphinstone," he said, "had Andrew Merclison a cast in his left eye?"

"Certainly, he had," she replied. "A decided one!"

Crole turned to the coroner.

"Numerous witnesses can prove that the unfortunate gentleman into whose death you are inquiring had such a cast—a squint—in his left eye, sir," he remarked. "He also had a birthmark, in the form of a brown mole, or blemish, on his right forearm. That, however, is not an uncommon mark, I believe, and I don't attach great importance to it. But I am strongly convinced that further proof of the identity of the deceased as Andrew Merclison will be found, and I should suggest—"

"There need be no doubt about it!" exclaimed a sudden voice from the spectators. "The man was Andrew Merclison!"

I knew whose voice that was before I looked round. Old Mr. Hassendene, whom I had noticed when Crole and I entered the room, had risen from his seat, and was smiling informally at the coroner.

"Mrs. Elphinstone can't be positive, I may as well say that I am! I knew Andrew Merclison well enough in the old days, when he used to come here, and afterward when he was a young man—I knew him, too, after he'd married Miss Linton, now Mrs. Elphinstone. And my memory for faces is remarkably keen, and I recognized him easily enough when I saw him the other night. Andrew Merclison, without doubt!"

"Where did you see this man, Mr. Hassendene?" interrupted the coroner.

"I saw him the night on which he evidently met his death," replied the old gentleman. "It was in Birnside village street, near my house."

"And you are quite positive on this matter of identity?"

"I am absolutely positive! The man was Andrew Merclison, whatever

Wetherby Lost No Time in Letting the Authorities Know Why He and His Party Were There.

he may have called himself of recent years."

The coroner glanced at the solicitors gathered about the table at the head of which he sat.

"I think we had better adjourn for a fortnight," he said. "During that time—"

Just then a policeman opened the door of the room, ushering in a young, spectacled man. The coroner paused and glanced inquiringly at him.

The newcomer pulled out a card-case, and advancing to the head of the table, whispered a few words in the coroner's ear. I saw a look of something between surprise and perplexity cross the coroner's face.

"We seem to be dealing with a strangely mysterious matter, quite apart from the death," he remarked. "This gentleman," he glanced at the card—"Mr. Stephen Postlethwaite, solicitor, from York—tells me that he saw accounts of this case in the papers yesterday, and has hurried here to give some information. I suppose we'd better have it now?"

Mr. Postlethwaite formally described himself as a solicitor. He produced a diary, and exhibited an entry which recorded a call from Mr. Salim Mazaroff.

"Mr. Mazaroff," he continued, "who was a total stranger to me, introduced himself as staying in York for a few days at the North Eastern hotel. He then informed me that he was a very wealthy man; that he had made his money in various trading concerns in the East, and lately in extensive diamond dealings in South Africa; that he had now retired from all this, had realized his various properties, and lodged all the proceeds in cash at his London bank, the Imperial Banking Corporation of South Africa, pending investment in this country. Then in a rather jocular fashion he remarked that up to then, as he had no children, and no relations, he had never made a will, but he now desired to do so. He produced a sheet of paper on which he had written out his wishes, handed it to me, and asked if I could put it into shipshape form. I told him I would have the will prepared for him, and he was to call and execute it at any time after three o'clock that afternoon. He returned to my office at half past three, when the will was ready for his signature. He duly appended that and carried the will off with him. I was not until some days later that I found that he had omitted to give him his own original draft, which I found lying amongst some papers on my desk. I went round to the North Eastern hotel with it, myself, but learned then that Mr. Mazaroff and his friend Mr. Holt had left for Durham and the north, leaving no address. I therefore locked up the draft. Yesterday I read in the newspapers the various accounts of what had happened here, and as I particularly noticed that Mr. Mazaroff had been robbed of his papers as well as his money and valuables, I thought it my duty to come here at once and tell what I knew."

"Much obliged to you, I'm sure, Mr. Postlethwaite," the coroner said. "Now, according to you the deceased man carried off this will in his pocket. It appears from the evidence that everything he had on him—money, valuables, papers—was stolen, most likely by the murderer or murderers: presumably the will has gone with the rest. However, it's something to know that such a document was in existence. You say he told you he was a wealthy man. Did he say how wealthy?"

"Yes. He told me he was worth about eight hundred thousand pounds."

The coroner leaned back in his chair, put the tips of his fingers together, and looked round the court. Then he turned again to the witness.

"I think we'll trouble you to read that draft, Mr. Postlethwaite," he said, quietly.

Postlethwaite read—amidst a dead silence:

"This is the last will of me, Salim Mazaroff, of the Hotel Cecil, London, in the county of Middlesex and of 941 Darling street, Cape Town, South Africa. I devise and bequeath all my estate and effects, real and personal, which I may die possessed of or entitled to unto Mervyn Holt, of 55a Jernyn street, London, absolutely, and I hereby appoint the said Mervyn Holt sole executor of this my will and I revoke all former wills and codicils."

This was all. But I was suddenly conscious that all eyes had turned from the witness to me.

The first thing that I was accurately conscious of after the crushing shock of the York solicitor's announcement was Crole's voice, close to my ear.

"Keep quiet, Holt!" he was whispering intently. "Keep quiet—calm!" — I don't think I did more than hear him—I was watching the coroner, feeling, now, that he, somehow, crystallized in himself all that the various people in that room were thinking and wondering.

The coroner looked around—at nobody in particular.

"I understand that the will has not been found," he said. "The theory is that it was stolen by the supposed murderer, or other of the deceased's papers. Nobody knows anything about it, eh?"

Wetherby was suddenly on his legs, with a sidelong glance at me.

"As Mr. Holt, the beneficiary, is present, sir," he said, "I should like to ask him if he knows anything about it?"

"I know nothing about it!" I exclaimed. "I never heard of it!"

Wetherby gave me another look; there was something cynical in it which I strongly resented.

LOSS BY POOR DISTRIBUTION

By DR. STEPHEN I. MILLER, Credit Men's Association.

INEFFICIENT distribution has cost the people of the United States enough since the war to pay off the national debt. Bankruptcies have caused a loss of over five billions of dollars in the last decade, and that represents only part of the waste of inefficient distribution. Retail stores have multiplied by thousands, and the average life of these stores has been short. There has been a constant stream of men bringing their small savings to the altar of merchandising ambition. Without a knowledge of accounts, buying, advertising, mark-up, turnover, credits, collections and service to customers, they have cut down the average volume of business per store, thereby increasing costs of distribution and prices to consumers. Handicapped by the lack of business understanding and strangled by competition they have constituted an unbroken business death march.

Into this scene of merchandising desolation and chaos has come the chain store, quickening competition, hastening elimination. The competition of chain stores has undoubtedly hurried many a retailer into bankruptcy. On the other hand, the chains have introduced far-reaching economics, stimulated adaptation and brought about greater co-operation between wholesaler and retailer.

Retailing is essentially a service. The merchant is a host, the customer a guest. Success in a store depends upon consideration of detail and a human equation closely bound up with ownership. The large scale farmer has never put the small farmer out of business. I predict a profitable future for both the farmer and the independent retailer who observe the economies of the day.

FARMERS AFFECTED BY WAR

By GEORGE E. ROBERTS, President N. Y. National City Bank.

Instead of attempting to provide relief to farmers who cannot produce wheat and cotton as cheaply as can farmers in other states making use of machinery especially adapted to that region, the cheaper production costs should be accepted as a development on the whole contributing to the general welfare and the necessary adjustments should be made elsewhere.

The farm problem as existing today had its origin in the World war. The war caused derangement of production and trade which are factors of disturbance today. Western Europe had been accustomed to rely upon Russia for large supplies of foodstuffs, and the cutting off of these supplies, together with the devastation of much of Europe by the armies, gave a great stimulus to farm production outside of Europe. Now Europe is back in full production and an overproduction of farm products exists in the world, and a problem of farm relief exists in every country. Moreover, along with the expansion of agriculture in other countries came the discovery that wheat and cotton can be grown in the region which in my school days was marked in the geographies as the Great American desert, and that by the use of machinery especially adapted to that region they can be grown more cheaply than in the older wheat and cotton states. That discovery has had serious consequences to the farmers of these older states.

MODERN PARENT TOO MECHANICAL

By MRS. HUGH BRADFORD, President Parent-Teacher Congress.

Education begins in the home and the training most important to a nation or civilization depends upon the proper technique of parenthood. Parenthood brings with it much responsibility and as much importance as business. The father must realize this and lend his co-operation to the spirit of home and life.

The whole family, in my opinion, should plan together, play together and progress together. The result would be much less crime and unhappiness.

We find ourselves forgetful of the finer human touches, human sympathies and human interests, while the objective world of action and achievement lures us on.

Really, the telegram and mail can wait until our children have received and welcomed us. They are material things which will not change after a little time.

But these children, these human personalities, have interests and feelings which normally are at their height when we come home.

Coldly met, these urges and emotions wane, and, as they weaken, they are not so likely to return so vigorously. The child enthusiasm cannot grow nor can it even live without some human warmth from us to keep it glow.

WORLD CAN DO WITHOUT WAR

By REV. DR. MINOT SIMONS, New York (Unitarian).

If new wars come a grateful people will honor their saviors, but new wars need not come. War is not necessary to human nature. All the primitive human passions that expressed themselves in blood vengeance and blood feuds, in dueling and in slavery still remain, but these institutions are gone. The human impulses which have led to war are likewise permanent, but they can express themselves in better ways. War can be discarded as a method and human nature can go right along as before.

This message of the social psychologist ought to be proclaimed from the housetops in order that all fatalism about war may be banished from the earth.

WORKING FOR CHILD HEALTH

By R. L. WILBUR, Secretary of the Interior.

There are two general methods of working for the care of the child. One visualizes a great national organization reaching out, spreading its tentacles into every part of the country and telling people what to do. The other visualizes the local forces coming together in a united effort and doing a job in accordance with local possibilities.

I say quite frankly that I belong to what may be called the county seat group—the local crowd—not the national crowd. I have a feeling that we will never develop a real democracy unless we develop it with a local significance and interest.

Scottish Abbey Holds Relics of Robert Bruce

Subject to the fulfillment of certain conditions, the trustees of Professor Noel Paton handed over the following articles to the Kirk-session of Dunfermline abbey: 1. A portion of the skeleton of King Robert the Bruce, namely, the metatarsal or bone of the great toe. 2. A small portion of the outer leaden shroud of King Robert the Bruce. 3. A small portion of the tollie d'or in which the body of King Robert the Bruce was wrapped.

The remains of one of the iron nails which were found among the remains of the coffin in which the body reposed. 5. The remains of one of the six iron rings, or rather handles, which had been filled in with lead into the largest of two stones protecting the vault of the Bruce when first discovered on February 17, 1818. 6. Twelve fragments—white marble and calc stone—"believed to be portions of the magnificent monument of King Robert the Bruce at Dunfermline destroyed by the Lords of the Congregation." The relics are preserved in an oak glass-fronted cabinet placed alongside of the abbey pulpit erected immediately above the vault of the Bruce—London Mail.

French Enjoy Fishing

No fewer than 10,000 fishermen took part in a competition and congress which was held at Vichy, writes the Paris correspondent of the London Sunday-Observer. The number is not only sufficient to show what a placid person the Frenchman really is—at least when he reaches a certain age—but also that he has a natural passion for sport. I do not mean sport as he understands the word, for he does not really care about games, but sport in the sense of shooting and fishing. Game shooting is far more a pursuit of the whole people of France than in England, and there is hardly a middle-aged Frenchman who is not a fisherman.

EDSON WAITE

George L. Browning, President of The Seaboard National Bank of Los Angeles, Says:

"A father can do no more damnifying thing to his son than to leave him a fortune to handle without having taught him how to handle that fortune. It is like handing a loaded weapon to a child who knows nothing about handling such weapons."

"A daughter at five receives her first music lesson. Continuously she is taught and continuously she practices her music until she reaches her maturity. Because of the foresight, patience, interest and energy of her parents she is an accomplished musician. The son at five is given his first lesson in business. Continuously he is taught and continuously he practices business dealings. At maturity he can play the game of business as easily as the daughter can play the piano."

"How foolish are the parents who expect the son to be a successful business man after having neglected to teach him economic principles and business practices in the early formative period of his life!"

"Into the child's mind and soul there must be built a solid foundation on which rests the business principles. The child must have formed a habit of close analysis, definite objective, creative thinking, unyielding determination and honesty of purpose. The schools alone cannot give this. The home—the parents must bring this about by directing the child's activities and thereby the child's habit of thought."

"A father should make a pal of his son, and as soon as the boy can count, responsibility of paying the bills, of placing values on purchases, of determining possibilities of savings should be placed on the child. The child should be made to clearly understand that money within itself has no value, but is merely an implement to use in the garden of life, and it is either good or bad as it is made so by its use."

IN MEMORY OF CATO ROEBUCK

In the twilight of July 3rd, a dear loved one ascended through the shining gates of Heaven. Oh! we'll wait for the day to come when we shall meet him on the shining shore where there is a shepherd. His dear soul is transferred to God where he is sleeping to await the coming of the Resurrection where loved ones will part no more.

Dear Cato was only eighteen, and was taken out in the vigor of life. But Oh! we must not say Cato is dead, but is now resting in Heaven.

We all loved dear Cato for he was always full of laughter and sunshine. A brightness that will never shine again on earth. The path was brightened wherever he trod. But in spite of all, God loved him best and has taken him to sleep in a mansion of rest.

It was at the second overturning of the car when his precious neck was broken and his darling body crushed. But we are sure he was prepared and awaiting that great judgment day where he met his father and other loved ones gone ahead. He left his mother, two sisters, and three brothers to mourn his absence.

Dear mother, brothers and sisters, an angel of death has entered your home the fourth time. Let the assurance of his having entered the Kingdom of God be a comfort to you; for in a much sweeter home and awaits your coming.

The girl smiled enviously. "Oh, Miss Hale," she said, "if only I could sleep during the day time—how happy I would be! Do you mean to say you actually can sleep here in the chair car?"

I nodded, and she sighed, "You are a lucky person."

I put my head back, and soon fell asleep. When I woke up refreshed my companion looked tired, and there were deep lines under her eyes. Again she said, "You are lucky! I tried to take a nap, but it was no use."

All of you who have trouble sleeping in the day time have my sincere sympathy. But I wonder if the difficulty is not more mental than physical. Probably you try so hard to sleep that you defeat your purpose. Try this method, the next time you have a chance to take a nap: Drop down on a couch and close your eyes, but do not try to go to sleep. Just relax, and let your hands and feet go limp. Think of pleasant things, but do not try to plan anything definite. Even if you do not go to sleep, at least you will feel rested because you relaxed.

Many women find a warm bath is an excellent way to rest tired nerves and bring a complete sense of relaxation. Simply fill your bath tub with water that is neither hot nor cold—just warm and soothing. Then throw a handful of granulated bath salts into the water. They will dissolve very quickly, softening the water and making your bathroom smell like a garden of flowers.

After your bath, gently rub your skin with toilet water, and apply dusting powder with a big, fluffy powder puff. You will be surprised how easily your clothes slip on afterward.

If you plan to go out, I recommend a little nap after this "luxury" bath. Five or ten minutes' rest will make your eyes brighter and your mind seem much more alert. If your eyes feel especially tired and drawn, try this simple remedy: Saturate two small pads of cotton with good eye lotion. Let a few drops of the lotion run into your eyes, and then place one of the dampened pads of cotton over each eye. Let these pads remain on your eyes while you take a nap, or rest for a few minutes. The antiseptic eye wash will soothe your lids, and your eyes will be bright and clear when you get up.

Nellie Maxwell Learned Cooking Art

Many of new recipes for preparing the table are turned out by Miss Maxwell. We find them in magazines and on the wrap-around breakfast foods. These recipes produce palatable results. Many of them are tried.

Chilton County News is now a regular department devoted to their preparation. This is written by Miss Maxwell. We don't know how other people are treated, but we do know that Miss Maxwell's recipes are well liked to cook. When a young girl she helped in her mother's home at Neely. After entering high school, she studied science and tried out many of the things she learned at the school room.

At the Neenah High School, Miss Maxwell went to the State Normal School for a preliminary to teaching. She spent several years. Then she came to Chilton County. She was in domestic science at the University of Wisconsin. She was in domestic science at the University of Wisconsin. She was in domestic science at the University of Wisconsin.

Poultry Course Set For Farmers' Week

Auburn, Ala., July 10.—Instruction in poultry will be featured at farmers' week exercises at the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, July 28 to August 2. An outstanding speaker will be Prof. Frederic H. Stoneburn of Memphis, Tennessee. Opportunities for poultry production in the South will be his subject at a general session, July 28, and he is expected to point out many advantages which this section offers. Later, those especially interested in poultry will hear him speak.

Professor Stoneburn organized the first poultry department in the United States at the Connecticut Agricultural College at Storrs, Connecticut, and has been active in poultry work for many years.

Prof. George A. Trollope, head of the poultry department, has announced that the program calls for three days of instruction on poultry during the short course. He said that nearly all phases of the industry will be covered. Special problems on incubation, management, feeding, culling, disease prevention, and breeding will be considered. In the morning lectures will be made and in the afternoon demonstrations given. Special attention will be given to vaccination for fowl pox, he said.

Speakers will include Dale F. King, associate professor of poultry, H. R. Bailey, extension poultryman, C. T. Bailey, manager, egg laying contest; R. B. Jones of the State Department of Agriculture, Montgomery; and others. More than 1,000 farm people are expected to attend farmers' week here where instruction on all major farm problems will be featured. Entertainment features have also been planned and it is expected that many farm people will consider the week a vacation.

Half a minute after Mrs. J. C. Thompson and three guests left her auto in Cairo, Ill., the engine exploded and the machine was shattered.

George Rose of New Orleans' dropped dead from heart disease while being pursued by police after stealing a suit of clothes.

work for the State Agricultural Colleges of Iowa and Nebraska.

In these connections, she helped women in the small communities with the planning of their various household duties. For the last ten years Miss Maxwell has given lectures and demonstrations for the University of Wisconsin at the many farmers' institutes held there.

Any recipe written by Nellie Maxwell can be relied upon to produce a successful and palatable dish for your table. Your task will be free of experiment; Miss Maxwell has done all of that in her own kitchen laboratory. Freak concoctions and those calling for ingredients not easily obtainable in small communities are absent from her column.

Good housekeepers are always glad to surprise their families and friends with new dishes prepared from sound recipes. Experiments often cost time and money—not to mention the embarrassment which results when a new dish goes wrong.

Women readers who are following Nellie Maxwell's suggestions are introducing to their tables the variety demanded of the good housekeeper. They will tell you that Miss Maxwell's advice is dependable and sound. Read what she offers today and then watch the folks sit up and take notice.

TEXACO

MOTOR OIL

The new Texaco Motor Oil is here! It's longer-lasting! It's crack-proof! Here in this new oil are all the qualities which were never before obtainable in any one oil. There were oils that gave remarkable mileage. There were oils that flowed freely at zero. There were oils that were dewaxed and free from impurities that formed hard carbon. But not until now were all these desirable qualities to be found in any one single oil.

Because the new Texaco Motor Oil is crack-proof it does not break down under the high pressures and temperatures of the modern engine so as to form hard carbon. And because it is longer-lasting you get the benefit of increased mileage in every quart. The new Texaco is manufactured in five grades: C, D, E, F, and G, corresponding in body to S. A. E. (Society of Automotive Engineers) viscosity ratings. The price is 30c a quart (35c for Grade G). The right grade for your car is ready for you now. Drive in today.

JAYWALKING EDICT VIOLATED

Catcher Earl Smith Lands Among Most Unruly Bunch

Earl "Oil" Smith, former Pittsburgh catcher who is one of the monopoly of backstops now under hire by the irascible Casey Stengel at Toledo, used to be considered a rather rough person. Smith was in plenty of riots in the major leagues and enjoyed the reputation of being the kind of fellow best to avoid. But he finds the American association too much for him.

After the second game in Toledo, Smith sought his friend, Tom Sheehan.

"Say, Tom," he asked, "what kind of a league is this anyway? I've been in it eleven days and there has been eight riots. Why every time I'm catching I have a funny feeling that somebody always is sneaking up behind me with a bat. I swear, I'm not going to say a word."

"You ain't seen nothin' yet," answered Sheehan. "You should see a series between Minneapolis and St. Paul some time. They have a roll call after every one of those games and usually they're three or four of the boys missing."

Missouri Highways Secure From Annoying Punctures

Missouri motorists are being saved about $500 a day in expense and grief from punctures.

That is the state highway department's estimate of the value of three 960-pound magnets attached to a two-ton truck which patrols gravel roads of the state.

Remove Cause of Puncture.

Potential causes of punctures thus are cleared off Missouri roads in wholesale amounts. Usually a day's run, with the truck covering about 56 miles of road surface, brings an average of 112 pounds of miscellaneous metal—nails, bolts, springs, staples, tin cans and scrap iron.

On the assumption that the magnets' work prevents 1,000 punctures a day, C. P. Owens, maintenance engineer of the highway department, says the outfit means a saving of at least $500 a day to motorists, figuring each puncture's cost at 50 cents.

With one magnet hanging from the rear of the truck, and two others at the sides, the truck can clean a strip of road surface from seven to eight feet wide.

The operating apparatus consists of a 110-volt compound wound generator equipped with panel, voltmeter, ammeter, automatic discharge switch and powered by a five horse power gasoline engine, all mounted on the truck.

Experiments have shown the magnets operate efficiently when adjusted to a height of four inches above the road surface, with the truck moving at ten or twelve miles an hour.

It is necessary to "demagnetize" every four or five miles to clear off the magnets' collection.

Radio Opens Garage Doors

Instead of climbing out of the automobile to open the garage doors, just press a button on your machine and ride in. That will be possible by use of a new device invented in Switzerland. Pressing the button causes radio waves to be sent out, and these are picked up by an aerial on top of the garage and serve to start a motor which automatically opens and closes the doors.

Harvard Gridiron Card Is Booked for 3 Years

One of the main reasons why Harvard and Princeton, despite conciliatory undergarment gestures, will not resume football relations for some time to come is that Harvard has no late season open date on its gridiron schedule until at least 1933. If then, only recently, the Crimson announced its football slate so far ahead as 1932, with Penn State, Dartmouth, Brown, Army, Holy Cross and Yale filling the last five Saturdays. Presumably, it has some commitments beyond that.

Harvard, freed of any permanent hookup outside of its traditional climax with Yale, has broadened its football policy since breaking with Princeton after the 1926 season. A two year agreement with Michigan ends with a game at Cambridge this fall. Next year the University of Texas will be a newcomer on the Crimson schedule.

School Championship of Japan Attracts Crowds

The school championship of Japan attracted more spectators, average per game, than the world series in the United States.

If the Japanese players could bat as ours, and the organization of baseball in the United States should send the winners of the world series to Japan, a most estimable man born in Japan informs the editor of Sporting News that each game would attract more than 150,000 spectators.

The national game does splendidly in the Philippine islands, and is played excellently by the natives. The Japanese say they cannot be out-batted by the Filipinos, but the latter affirm they are better baseball players than their neighbors to the north. A young Filipino was asked whether he would prefer the independence of the island, with baseball omitted, and replied immediately that he would be much better satisfied to continue "just as things are going," if there was any intention to do away with the game of baseball.

In fact, he preferred the present system to any which would permit some Filipino politicians to "but in"—note the correct use of the vernacular—and run the islands to suit themselves.

Women Use Chauffeurs

The fact that there are 650,000 private chauffeurs in the United States and that it costs $104,000,000 annually to provide them with uniforms, gives rise to the question of who employs chauffeurs most, men or women. "Despite the fact that the number of women automobile drivers increases daily, and that women are more proficient in the handling of a car, women use chauffeurs more than men do," says an official of the American Automobile association.

The wonderful stride of Frank Wyckoff of Southern California won him undying fame when he created a new world's mark for the 100-yard dash without the aid of starting blocks. Wyckoff's time was 9.4 seconds, made during the national collegiate track and field championships at Chicago.

When Babies CRY

Babies will cry, often for no apparent reason. You may not know what's wrong, but you can always give Castoria. This soon has your little one comforted; if not, you should call a doctor. Don't experiment with medicines intended for the stronger systems of adults! Most of those little upsets are soon soothed away by a little of this pleasant-tasting, gentle-acting children's remedy that children like.

It may be the stomach, or may be the little bowels. Or in the case of older children, a sluggish, constipated condition. Castoria is still the thing to give. It is almost certain to clear up any minor ailment, and could by no possibility do the youngest child the slightest harm. So it's the first thing to think of when a child has a coated tongue; won't play, can't sleep, is fretful or out of sorts. Get the genuine; it always has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package.

Dealers in Small Lots

Original Bucket Shops

"Bucket shop" is another expression which has an interesting origin. The old-fashioned stock brokers who were members of the New York stock exchange would not take an order to buy or sell less than 100 shares of stock on margin. Thus those people whose capital did not admit to their furnishing the necessary margin to trade in such a large amount were shut out from trading. A class of brokers, not members of the exchange, sprang up who made a practice of accepting orders for odd lots. When the total amounted to 100 or some multiple of 100 shares, they would give a joint order to some regular broker for execution. Thus the small orders were fitted together as the staves of a bucket, and the nickname of these intermediate brokers or jobbers grew to be "bucket shop keepers."

Remedy for Leaky Exhaust Valve Guides on Any Motor

The operation of a gasoline motor is not affected by leaky exhaust valve guides unless the wear is so bad that the valves do not properly seat, but leaky inlet guides cause irregular run ning at slow speeds and make it impossible to get the motor to idle smoothly. The illustration shows a way to eliminate this trouble. A light spring is fitted over the valve stem and a felt or leather washer is fitted on the stem with a hole that will just allow the valve stem to slide.

Spring and Washer on Inlet Guides Stop L. s.k.s.

It is a good idea to place a thin metal washer between the spring and the felt, although this washer is not shown in the illustration. The light spring will keep the washer pressing against the top of the guide and prevent air leakage and the consequent spoiling of the mixture. This suggestion should prove useful on old cars where the expense of new valve guides is not justified.—Popular Science Monthly.

Pressure Reading Does Not Determine Quantity

It does not pay at any time to accept the pressure reading on the dash oil gauge as final on the amount of lubricant in the crankcase. This is particularly true in the summer.

The gauge is an efficient mechanism but it is not devised to record the amount of oil. To determine accurately, the gauge under the oil filter pipe should be read. This should not be construed as reflecting on the dash gauge. It is designed to record oil pressure not oil quantity. There is a great difference.

Do You Harvest Any Corn With Hogs?

By C. E. Stapp, County Agent

1. An average of the Alabama Experiment Station figures for the past 15 years—shows a profit of $4.06 per acre or 28 cents per bushel in favor of hogging off corn compared with harvesting and marketing corn.
2. Hogging off corn was more profitable than marketing corn in all but three years out of the past 15 years.
3. Average Alabama yearly hog prices were used in this study. Corn-fed hogs will bring from 1 to 1 1/2 cents above these prices on most markets.
4. Six and one-half bushels of corn and 36 pounds of tankage per 100 lbs. of pork were used. Experiments at Auburn prove this to be sufficient under field conditions.
5. An average price of $1.32 per bushel for corn in the field would have been realized during the past 15 years if the corn had been marketed thru hogs.

Another Interesting Story From China

imagine. A man holds the handles and keeps the things standing up and does some pushing, but the main power that carries it along the rough road is a donkey that is hitched to the machine by means of ropes tied to his gear and to the wheelbarrows. They carry anywhere from six hundred to a thousand pounds at a load. At one place I saw several of them carrying 800 pounds of coal each. At one place we met about twenty of them loaded with Standard Oil products, most of it being kerosene. There were from 10 to 16 five gallon cans on each wheelbarrow.

Soon after we started out into the country from the R. R. station we passed a string of these wheelbarrows. One of the donkeys decided he did not like the looks of the motor-bus and began to show his feelings in the matter by pitching and jumping. The chauffeur of the wheelbarrow was not prepared to run in high, for he was afraid he would turn over and brake something. Since he could not get hold of the donkey, and since he did not have any brakes, he just ran the wheel off into a little ditch, and the donkey had to stop, for he could not pull it out of the ditch.

At one time our bus was making good time along a smooth piece of road, when all at once we slowed up and stopped. Every one looked out to see what was the matter, and what do you suppose it was? Somebody had cut a ditch about eight inches deep across the road and put spikes in the bottom of it all for the benefit of the bus tires. But fortunately the driver saw it in time to stop before running into it. They told me that sometimes the village people do this in order to cause all the trouble possible to the bus people. Then at other times they do it thinking the bus will run into it and have a couple of punctures, and while the tires are being repaired the robbers come out of hiding and rob the passengers.

Yes, there were crops along the way. The most interesting crop at the time was wheat. It looked like miles and miles of wheat fields, but when one is close to it he sees that there are only small plots of wheat with numerous small plots of other things in between. Kaoliang (Millet) had been planted in many of these places and was coming up. Peanuts were just being planted. About 50 years ago a missionary brought over a handful of peanuts (big goobers) and gave them to a Chinese farmer. The next year he divided seed with his neighbor and finally the seed of these fine peanuts were scattered over a large area. Now tens of thousands of tons of peanuts are raised in the province. About four million dollars worth are shipped each year from Tsingtao to foreign countries.

Down the road we saw two big heaps of something and they seemed to be moving. When we were near we saw it was two wheelbarrows heaped high with bundles of straw braid. Perhaps your next summer's straw hat will be made of some of this straw I saw on the road. The best and whitest wheat straw is plaited into braid and immense quantities of it are shipped to America and Europe. The plaiting is all done by hand. On the side of the road is a village you may see old men, women, and children working away at it. They do it so deftly that they do not have to look at it. They will gaze at the foreigner and carry on a conversation about him while they go on with their work.

In one town where we stopped I visited a girls school that is run by the Lutheran missionaries. There were about a hundred girls and they were doing some fine work. But what I started out to tell you is that the buildings now being used for the school were formerly used as a hair-net factory. Since so many women in the world bobbed their hair and quit wearing hair nets the business failed and many thousands of women were thrown out of work. The world is very closely knit together. What is done in one part of the world will affect people in far distant parts of the world. But there seems to be progress. Where once women worked long hours for a few cents a day making hair nets, now girls are going to school and preparing for better service, and best of all are studying the Bible and many of them are becoming useful Christians.

Many other interesting things were seen, but we must not impose upon the good nature of the publishers of the papers there at home. If the Man on the Corner ever gets out of anything to write about, tell him to come over here and I will put him on a corner where he can see enough to fill several papers.

Hers to Command

An army to set her table

When the housewife tells A & P her needs—by her purchases in its stores—an army of men, trained to obey her will, stands at command.

And because great numbers of women who like good things and good values trade in A & P stores, the order of one housewife becomes the order of many. A vast association of housewives, A & P's customers, thus grows out of a single aim—good food at least cost.

The whole A & P army is at their command, and the buying of all these housewives—massed to serve each—gives to all the pick of every crop, of every food.

Growers and manufacturers know that only their best products at fair prices will satisfy this large body of consumers. In return, these industries are assured of regular sale of their goods.

So the housewife who shops at A & P is certain of the best; while her steady, thrifty buying supports honest food industries in every part of the country.

In shopping to her own advantage, she is helping the food producer.

or finished a modern fourth grade are eligible. No one can enroll who does not meet these requirements, and the schools are not for children, unless they are around the ages of sixteen, eighteen and up, and failed to receive an education while younger.

Perhaps one of the most outstanding features of the Opportunity Schools which are to be taught in this county this year, is the fact that the schools of this county have been selected to be among the very few that the state has selected to have a course in Home Economics.

Supt. of Education B. Lawrence, received a message from the State Board of Education Tuesday afternoon stating that they had selected Chilton County as among those counties to have this special course in its Opportunity schools this year. This alone is quite a compliment for our county and the citizens here should take pride in the fact that the State Board has selected our county for this work.

Chilton County Abstract Co.

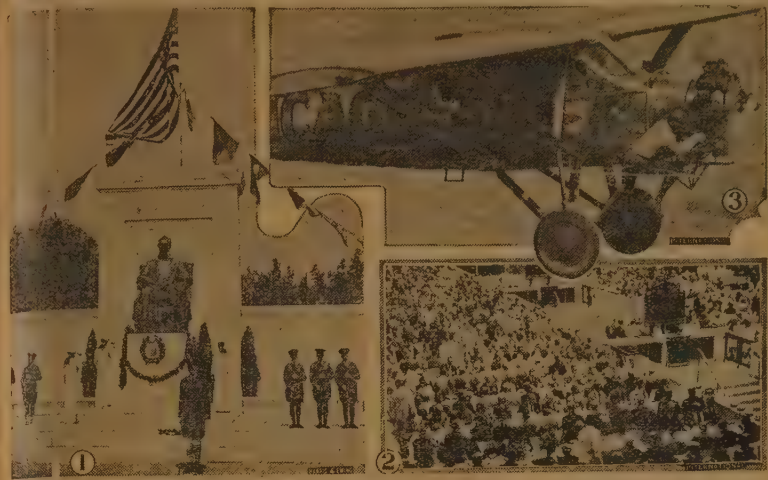

M. D. FOSHEE, Manager

A good business man will not buy a farm or any property without first looking it over to see what it is worth. However, some will buy or loan money on land without an abstract.

Isn't it equally as foolish to buy a farm without looking it over as to buy it and not know whether the titles are good or not? Without an abstract you do not know where you are getting the land you look at or not.

Before investing in land in any way have an abstract made and be safe.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Congress Finishes Up Much Legislation and Ends the Special Session.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

DETERMINED to bring the special session to a close before the fourth of July, congress was very busy the first part of the week, clearing up the pending legislation. Taking up the new World War veterans bill passed by the house, the senate again showed its utter disregard for President Hoover's views and its keen desire for votes next fall. It headed the measure down with amendments, chief of which was one increasing the pension rates to the Spanish war level. Another would permit veterans who contracted venereal diseases during their war service to obtain disability allowances.

The bill was sent to conference for disposition of the features that would be most objectionable to the President.

Among the bills passed by the house was the Wickesham commission's border patrol bill designed to help in curbing the smuggling of liquor from Canada and Mexico. It establishes an enlarged and extended border patrol service in the treasury under the assistant secretary in charge of the coast guard, increases the number of entry stations, and makes it a misdemeanor, subject to $100 fine, to cross the border except at an entry station, with certain exceptions.

The senate passed the house bill which authorized the President to consolidate and co-ordinate governmental activities affecting the war veterans.

SECRETARY of the Treasury Mellon announced that the fiscal year 1930 closed with a surplus in the treasury of $184,000,000. This amount represented the difference between receipts and expenditures. The public debt was reduced during the year by $740,000,000. There was a net balance in the general fund at the close of the year of $318,000,000.

While the surplus was substantial, the same as in the fiscal year 1929, Secretary Mellon pointed out that it included the abnormal sum of $70,000,000 paid by foreign governments in June in cash instead of in securities of the American government and also included abnormal customs receipts, due to anticipation of tariff legislation.

SENATORS JOHNSON of California, Moses of New Hampshire and Robinson of Indiana filed with the senate their minority report, setting forth their reasons for opposing ratification of the London naval treaty.

Dispatches from Washington said that the national defense committee of the American Legion had made a report two weeks previously recommending that the Legion declare for rejection of the treaty, and that nothing more had been heard of the matter. One rumor was that administration influences had succeeded in bringing about the pigeonholing of the report.

Over in London two of England's most famous naval commanders, Earl Beatty and Earl Jellicoe, made hot attacks on the treaty, asserting that by signing it their government was throwing away "the gun power by which the British empire came into being and developed into what it is today."

PRESIDENT HOOVER has named as head of the new federal power commission Lieut. Gen. Edgar Jadwin, who in his service as chief of army engineers gained a thorough knowledge of the waterways of the country. His nomination, with those of the other four commission members, will be sent to the senate in special session this summer for confirmation. When two members have taken office the new commission will supplant the old one, which had as its members the secretaries of war, interior and agriculture, and which, since 1920, has supervised the expenditure of about $350,000,000 for power development.

In the new commission applications for power plants are to be placed in the hands of five $10,000 a year men who, the act stipulates, may have no other occupation. Nor may they have been connected in any way with, or hold any stock in, power companies. At present 70 applications are pending with the commission.

IN A radio address to the governors' conference which met in Salt Lake City, President Hoover announced that federal, state and local governments had spent or contracted to spend a total of $1,700,000,000 for public works during the first six months of the present calendar year. This figure, he said, exceeded by over $200,000,000 that of the boom year of 1929. He advised the governors that there is still need for "continued serious effort" in every state and community to bring an early business recovery, and to reduce unemployment.

Several of the western governors delivered addresses scoring the federal government for its invasion of states' rights, especially with regard to the public domain, unappropriated lands, and mineral and oil rights.

PROHIBITION enforcement was transferred July 1 from the Treasury department to the department of justice, and Attorney General Mitchell became the commander in chief of the federal dry army with Col. Ames W. Woodcock as his chief of staff. It was understood in Washington that the government's limited staff and appropriation will be devoted hereafter to detecting larger commercial bootlegging, while the effort to obtain greater co-operation by the states will be expanded. Many changes have been made already in the force of prohibition administrators, the most important being in the metropolitan areas of New York and Chicago. In the former Maj. Maurice Campbell resigned when ordered to Boston to take charge of alcohol permits and gave out a statement attacking "United States attorneys with political aspirations," and Treasury department officials who "have not been sincere in efforts to enforce this law."

He declared his experience had led him to the following conclusion: "Prohibition is not the logical solution for temperance under our form of government, and I now publicly advocate the repeal of the Eighteenth amendment before the nation is consumed in the fires of its consequences."

Col. John H. J. Herbert became the enforcement boss of Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin, displacing E. C. Yel-lowley, who remains in control of alcohol permits in that area.

WITH the stroke of midnight on June 30 the last of the French troops of occupation departed from the Rhineland and Germany was freed from the incubus that had rested on it for almost twelve years. The German people celebrated the event with the ringing of bells, with great parades of singing men and women, with the playing of bands and with fireworks. Especially impressive was the jubilee in the town of Speyer in the Palatinate. Torches and flares lighted the bridge across the Rhine over which marched the town's police force of 660 men as thousands along the water's edge and in boats sang "Deutschland Ueber Alles."

The final phase of the military evacuation began in Wiesbaden at 9:30 o'clock in the morning. The inter-allied Rhineland commission, which has headquartered at Wiesbaden since September when the headquarters were moved from Coblenz, closed shop. A battalion of French troops lined up on Kaiserstrasse in front of the commission's building where three flags floated—Belgian, British and French.

The regimental band broke into the "Brabanconne" and the Belgian flag slowly descended. Then the military band played "God Save the King" and the Union Jack slid down the halcyons. It was a tense moment as the strains of the "Marseillaise" burst into the air and the tricolor floated down.

High Commissioner Paul Tirard and the other officials crossed the Rhine bridge to motors and a thousand French soldiers in full war panoply marched to the railroad station and entrained for home.

ALMOST before the outside world knew anything about it, there was a successful revolution down in Bolivia, caused by the alleged efforts of Hernando Siles, resigned president, to regain the office of chief executive and hold it in perpetuity. Troops led by Gen. Carlos Blanco Galindo occupied La Paz, the capital, after a hot fight, and Siles and his friends fled to refuge in foreign legations. The military junta took charge of the government and announced financial and other plans for the immediate restoration of the republic to its normal condition on a constitutional basis. It was understood that free elections would be held and a new president designated in such a manner that he cannot perpetuate himself in office.

The populace in La Paz was delighted with the success of the revolutionary movement, and great crowds surrounded the Brazilian legation which sheltered Siles, demanding that he be given up for trial by the courts. Gen. Hans Kundt, German chief of staff of the Bolivian army, who was accused not only of aiding Doctor Siles, but of Prussianizing the Bolivian forces, fled to the German legation. General Galindo took steps to protect all the former officials from violence.

GREAT BRITAIN is taking relentless measures to end the "passive" rebellion in India. The latest of these was the arrest of Pandit Motilal Nehru, a Hindu and acting president of the All-India national congress, and Sayed Mahmud, a Moslem; secretary of the congress. They were tried immediately and sentenced to six months' imprisonment. These arrests created a great sensation throughout India and a hartal or cessation of all work was proclaimed in protest. In Bombay a "boycott week" was started and housewives were urged to refrain from buying British goods.

The spirit of the Nationalists seems far from broken. In many cities the school students, both boys and girls, have joined the movement, quitting their schools, holding parades and assisting in the picketing of British shops.

TWO feats in aviation marked the week. First Roger Q. Williams with two companions made a nonstop flight from New York to Bermuda and back in the Columbia, the transatlantic Bellanca monoplane, in 17 hours and 8 minutes. Second, John and Kenneth Hunter of Sparta, Ill., smashed to smithereens the refueling endurance record over Sky Harbor airport north of Chicago. They refused to come down until the motor of their plane was worn out.

Bruges, Still Medieval

The Bell Tower of Bruges, Across a Canal.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

BRUGES, quaint old city of Belgium, where medieval life still exists, has just opened its annual carillon concert season—concerts that, their admirers are fond of declaring, bring "music from the heavens." A carillon is a group of bells attuned to the intervals of the musical scale and usually covering four octaves, hung in a high bell tower lay in and day out the music is produced by clock-work ringers; but in Bruges during the summer carillon season, world famous carillonneurs play by hand and foot, as does a great organist.

Bruges, like many unfamiliar foreign place names, may have an exotic sound to the American ear. But it has about as common an origin and is about as logically descriptive as "Three Rivers" or "Smith's Cross roads." Because the town from the beginning had numerous canals and structures carrying streets across them it was named (in Flemish) "Bridges." It is a sort of reversed Venice. Whereas the latter is an area of sea with islands scattered in it, Bruges is a land area cut into islands by numerous canals. In both cities many houses rise sheer from the water and boats are used for traffic.

Like Venice again, Bruges was once the commercial and banking center of the world. This was in the fourteenth century. The center of commercial activity had moved from Italy to Flanders, and Bruges was then Flanders' greatest market. World trade came up the River Zwyn which then gave it a harbor; merchants from the four quarters of the world maintained headquarters in the city; and its bourse regulated the exchange rate for all Europe. Ghent was a strong rival, but until the Zwyn finally silted up in 1490 Bruges held its own. At the height of its power Bruges had a population of 200,000, and was one of the wealthiest and busiest cities in Europe. Now the inhabitants number about 5,000.

Trade Ruined by Silt.

During its busiest era, Bruges boasted headquarters of merchants from seventeen countries. Fabrics were shipped from Italy and the East, furs from Russia and Bulgaria, metals from Poland and Hungary, wool, cheese and coal from the British Isles, fruits from Granada and Egypt, and Arabian spices and Ithenish wine were marketed there.

By the end of the fifteenth century the rivers and canals silted up, trade routes changed, and the merchants forsaken Bruges for Antwerp, leaving a city of Old World charm for travelers to enjoy.

Canals which were once crowded with shipping now are clogged with silt, moss and lily pads, and in some parts white swans fearlessly swim about. Boring quays are bare and silent. Many of the gabled dwellings and warehouses facing the quays, long the meeting places of bolshoi sea rovers, are unoccupied.

In the doorways of medieval houses old women sit for hours in their picturesque costumes, making lace. They look as though they had stepped out of a canvas of Jan Van Eyck or Hans Memling, famous Bruges artists. Some of the brick facades of the medieval homes are hung with large iron rings, which, in the days when Bruges was famed for its fetes, were used to hang ropes of flowers from wall to wall.

In the streets, huge thick-legged Flemish draft horses draw to market clumsy two-wheeled carts filled with green vegetables from nearby farms. And now and then one sees a dog-drawn milk cart, painted green, rumbling over the clean cobbles.

Grand Place, the city square, is the busiest place in Bruges on Saturdays when the market is ready for business shortly after dawn. City and rural costumes run the gamut of color and style, with broad flowing skirts and small lace caps dominating. Although vegetables abound on the well ordered stands, there are also copper and brass vessels, old clothes, used furniture and solid books.

Belfry Tower, Is Notable.

The Belfry Tower, one of Bruges' famous landmarks, rises 375 feet over the square. During the hectic struggles of the Flemish people with the Spaniards, the French, and neighboring towns, the bells in the Belfry Tower called the burghers to arms. In a room near the top there are numerous rods, pulleys and ropes which are connected with one of the finest carillons in Europe. It has 47 bells.

Viewed through a small window in the shaft, Bruges resembles a veritable checkerboard of red gables, pierced here and there by spires, towers and pinnacles. The narrow streets and canals wind in every direction and from this lofty perch the traveler sees Bruges as an inland island, for it is completely surrounded by natural streams and man-made canals.

Not to be cheated of a port by Nature's destructive forces, the people of modern Bruges have built several canals to the North Sea. The largest and most direct leads eight miles to Zeebrugge (meaning "the seaport of Bruges"). This port and its canal and the basin at Bruges figured prominently in the World war. The Germans developed a strong U-boat nest at Bruges from which their underwater commerce destroyers went out to sink many an allied ship and to which they returned for repairs and outfitting. When the war was over a tremendously strong shelter with a concrete roof six feet thick, built over the water, was left standing near the Bruges end of the sea canal, a monument to German U-boat activities.

The British, however, successfully hindered the U-boat activities from the Bruges nest by their famous sortie against the Zebrugge mole when an old ship filled with concrete was sunk across the entrance to the canal.

Medieval Architecture.

Altogether, Bruges is one of the quaintest of the old Flemish cities and is said to preserve in its architecture a more medieval aspect than any of its sister municipalities. Prominent architectural features are the church of Notre Dame and the Cathedral of St. Sauveur, both excellent examples of early pointed Gothic, and the Market Hall with its dominant belfry.

In St. Basil's chapel is kept the Sacred Vial, brought by crusading knights from Jerusalem, reputed to have been the vessel holding the water with which Joseph of Arimathea bathed the bloodstained body of Christ. This reliquary is carried once each year in the procession of the Most Precious Blood.

The tapestry manufacturers of Bruges were world famous, and this city has long been noted for its worsted cloths.

The bells of Bruges that are ringing out the summer concerts are typical of those of the other carillons of Belgium and Holland. To attain the range of four octaves, the bell producing the lowest note must weigh several tons, while the smallest weighs scarcely 20 pounds. The bells are connected to a keyboard or to a clock-work mechanism, which causes their clappers to strike.

Four-H Clubsters To Attend Outings

Auburn, Ala., July 9.—The camping season for 4-H club boys is here again. T. A. Sims, State leader in this work, reports that nearly 9000 boys will be in camp during July and August. This number is about half of the total enrollment of 4-H club boys in Alabama. Special interest in this work has resulted in a remarkable increase in enrollment. In 1923 there were only 1,850 boys engaged, while now enrollment has reached more than 18,000.

The camps will be under the direction of county agents and vocational teachers cooperating with Mr. Sims. Games, fishing, swimming, and other recreational features will be included on the camp programs. Mr. Sims stated that the main purpose of the camps is to get the farm boys together for a two-or-three-days outing. In addition, a half hour each day will be devoted to education. At most of the camps farm organization will be discussed.

There will be a camp in reach of every 4-H club boy in Alabama. An effort is being made to hold one in every county, but in some cases two or three counties will camp together.

In selecting a site for the camp the county agent picks a place where there is good drinking water and facilities for fishing and swimming. In many cases boy scout camps are used.

More Paper Mills May Come To State

Montgomery, July 10.—Examinations of paper pulpwood stands are being made by representatives of concerns that have not already located in Alabama. Two paper mills are now within the state, one at Mobile and the other at Tuscaloosa. Additional establishments of this character mean much to the Alabama farmers and other landowners who have tracts of young timber growth which formerly possessed but little value.

Recently the forester of a paper manufacturing concern not yet located within the state took an airplane flight in company with State forestry officials over a considerable part of central Alabama. He expressed himself as amazed at the amount of pulpwood available, even in the sections predominantly of agricultural character.

Alabama woodlands under forestal management can easily produce a cord per acre per annum. With the coming of more paper mills into the State the growing and selling of pulpwood becomes a very important alternate occupation for the farmer and a major industrial enterprise for the owners of large tracts. With good management pulpwood can be grown in ten years, and a citizen who has one hundred

Pecan Growers Plan
Central Sales Agency

Montgomery, Ala., July 3.—It is the plan of pecan growers of the Pecan producing states of the United States to organize a central sales agency thru which to market their pecans.

A committee composed of T. H. McHatton, president National Pecan Association, Albany; W. P. Bullard, J. M. Patterson, O. J. Wenzel of Georgia; J. L. Abbott; J. A. Kernodle of Alabama; Theo Bechtel, W. W. Swan of Mississippi; E. C. Butterfield, J. F. Rosborough, H. G. Lucas of Texas; D. V. Shubart, Okla.; Robt. H. Alexander, Arkansas; M. Hull of Louisiana and H. H. Simmons of Florida, have been appointed to work out complete plans of organization in cooperation with the Federal Farm Board.

This action was taken at a meeting of 75 pecan growers, marketing specialists, farm board representatives and other farm leaders at a meeting held in Montgomery Monday.

The Farm Board was represented by C. C. Teague, C. S. Wilson, H. F. Buchanan and K. B. Gardner.

Mr. Teague assured those present that the farm board is anxious to assist pecan growers in establishing a central sales agency. A proposed plan of organization prepared by the federal farm board after a long study was then read and discussed at length after which a resolution, approving the plan as a basis upon which to build the organization was introduced and unanimously approved. The committee is at present working to perfect the plan.

Quiet Again Prevails As 200 In Emelle Hunt Begin To Disband

Emelle, Ala., July 6.—Two negroes were slain early Sunday by armed posses searching for four negroes sought in connection with the slaying of two white men, bringing to six the deaths growing out of disorders arising the Fourth of July.

Quiet again prevailed late Sunday with roving bands of more than 200 men again disbanding, after a night of chasing wild reports of the four negroes being sighted at various places. Leaders said they were convinced the negroes, Esau, Ollie and John, have fled into Mississippi.

Those killed early Sunday were an unidentified negro in the railway station at Natchetta, Miss., and a negro woman, whose husband, James Eyer, failed to heed a command of a posse to bring his automobile to a stop on a road near the Alabama-Mississippi state line.

List of Those Killed

The previous death list included:
Grover Boyd, white, storekeeper.
Charlie Marrs, a white farmer.
John Robertson, negro, brother of Tom.

Jacob Robertson.
The unidentified negro killed at Natchetta was killed after he had fired at the possesmen and wounded Clarence Bush, of Emelle, in the elbow. Bush returned the fire, killing the negro. Members of the posse said they had found the negro in the station house and had sought to search him. Instead of complying with orders to raise his hands he opened fire.

Eyer apparently became panic stricken, when ordered to halt. Shots were fired in an effort to halt him and as the machine rolled to a stop, other occupants of the car fled. It was then discovered that the woman had been killed.

Officers Trace Reports

State law enforcement officers sent here Saturday by Gov. Graves from Montgomery were kept busy Sunday tracing down reports that the negroes sought had been captured. Possemen also drove hurriedly to various points, but as the day passed the conviction grew that the negroes had fled the country.

Late Sunday afternoon a few hands continued the search but they gave indications that they too would abandon the hunt by nightfall.

The trouble had its inception the afternoon of July the Fourth, in an argument between Esau Robertson and Clarence Boyd, nephew of Grover Boyd, who took a battery he had sold the negro from the car when he could not pay for it. The negro later appeared at Grover Boyd's store and began to talk to Clarence.

When the younger Boyd went outside he was attacked by Esau, his father and brothers. Grover Boyd, running to his nephew's aid, was shot down from behind by Jacob.

One Hanged By Mob

Bystanders grabbed Jacob, but the other negroes fled. Jacob was held in custody by a crowd that gradually grew as word of the shooting spread and that night he was taken to the woods and hanged by the mob.

Sheriff W. D. Scales and deputies arriving later took up the search with many of the mob joining them. At the home of John Robertson, brother of Tom, they asked to search the house and were met with gunfire. The fire was returned and John was killed.

John's fire dropped Marrs and wounded Jim Ayers, another white man, in the cheek. Enraged, the mob applied a torch to the Robertson house and the search began in earnest.

Between 200 and 300 armed men joined the search, but Saturday afternoon only a hand full remained. Reports that the negroes had been sighted, however, spread over the country and more than 200 were believed searching the countryside Saturday night.

Rewards of $300 for the capture of each of the four negroes wanted in connection with the slaying were offered late Saturday by Gov. Graves from Montgomery.

YOUNG BRIDES NOT DUMB

Modern brides are not so dumb with respect to home management as some would have us believe, according to Elizabeth Carter of the Radio Household Institute, who gives daily help talks to more than a million housewives over a nation-wide network of radio stations.

“The modern bride knows much more about the science of cooking and baking than her grandmother, despite general public opinion to the contrary,”

Miss Carter declares.

Then she illustrates her point by a reference to one perplexing problem of the past—how to make a cake rise and stay that way. Here science has come to the aid of the anxious cake baker by providing special cake flours, which take the guess-work out of her efforts, and incidentally save the digestion of her husband. With ordinary flour it is only a matter of extremely good luck when a cake comes out just right.

This is only one of the many ways in which scientific research has simplified the problems of the housewife. Domestic science is one of the important studies in the modern school. All of the newest cooking discoveries are placed in the hands of educational institutions by world-known authorities so that the modern bride may have the benefit of years of experience in these matters, which those of former generations had no means of obtaining.

Stuffed Cymling is a Welcome Dish

Cymling, eggplant, green peppers, large spanish onions and cabbage, are among the vegetables often served stuffed. Usually the stuffing is made of other vegetables and some cooked starchy material such as bread crumbs, rice, or spaghetti, to give body. Two or three flavors that blend well together are generally chosen from among such vegetables as tomato, corn, celery, cabbage, spinach, string beans and carrots. Onion flavor is desirable in almost every combination. Small amounts of two or to break the outer skin. Cook the cymling shell until tender in boiling salted water. Remove and drain. While the shell is still warm, rub the inside with butter so the flavor will go through the onion and green peppers. Also cook the inside of the cymling until tender and dry, add to it the seasonings and the bread crumbs. If any of the vegetables mentioned are used, or the crisped bacon or salt pork, mix with the other ingredients. Place the mixture in the shell and cover the top with buttered crumbs. Bake in the oven until hot through and golden brown on top. Cut in slices and serve at once.

HINTS FOR HOUSEWIVES

Lack of appetite in a child is an indication of something wrong. He may be ill, tired, or upset.

Screens at kitchen windows should cover the entire window and permit opening at top and bottom for ventilation.

Since mildew stains are much more frequent in warm weather, the wise housewife does not leave clothes for any length of time sprinkled and rolled for ironing, or stored in any damp dark place.

Centralize the sewing equipment and save time in making the children's summer clothes. If the sewing basket and machine, ironing board, iron, cutting table, and other supplies are in one room, a great deal of effort is saved.

Vitamin A in Ripe Manzanillo Olives

Ripe Manzanillo olives may be served for their food value rather than as a mere relish, for this variety has been found to be rich in vitamin A. Manzanillo olives, which are of medium size, are grown in California, ripened on the tree, treated in the canning factory to develop flavor, and sealed and processed in air-tight containers like other canned foods. They contain from 14 to 20 per cent of oil.
